Marist Granted Affiliation With Marketing Association

by Frank Schiavi

The American Marketing Association is a membership organization composed of businesses, schools, the United States, Canada and other countries who share a common interest in studying possible solutions to marketing problems. In late September, Marist College was granted affiliation with the association and, as a result, the Marist collegiate chapter was formed.

The Marist chapter, which consists of students, is initiated by Richard L. McCarthy of the Business Department. McCarthy, a full-time member of the association, created the chapter so that students would be provided with insight into the practices of marketing. The chapter will also provide a closer link between students and national businesses.

In an effort to advertise Marist College to high school students and future college candidates, the Marist College Student Government is sponsoring a project called "Bring A Friend To Marist." The project originated as an idea to help recruit future freshman students into Marist for the 1974-1975 academic year. Brian Morris, president of the Student Government, and Pete Wilderotter, both a member of the Student Government, conceived the idea for the purpose of attracting students to the college.

Wilderotter said, "most of the credit for this program belongs to Brian Morris. He actually thought about the idea first, and then came to me, and together we presented it to the student government." He added, "the student government supported the program along with the Council of Student Leaders, in an effort to help increase the enrollment at Marist." Wilderotter said, "when Morris presented the idea to the Director of Admissions, David Flynn, and to Dean Richard LaFreniere, both seemed interested, and were enthusiastic with their support. The student government is working through the Admissions office with Mr. Flynn's assistance."

Letters were mailed out from Mr. Flynn's office, to all of the students at Marist, requesting their co-operation and help with the program. Wilderotter said, "the letters were sent out to the students encouraging them to ask a 'friend', (brother or sister), to come up for the weekend of November 16, to be in on the planned festivities. The letters offered a description of the day, and the various activities that have been organized for the coming guests." Wilderotter said, "we do not quote the exact number of responses by Marist students, but he estimated that approximately 100 'friends' have accepted the invitations, and that more are expected within the next week or so. He said, "those who did respond were from various locations including Long Island, New Jersey, New York City and Yankees."

Wilderotter said, "the program schedule is all set, beginning with a registration at 12:00 noon, followed by an information session in the Campus Center at 2:00. The information session will be directed by the English Department, and will consist of many of the academic departments and clubs on campus." "At 4:00, said Wilderotter, the Marist friends will conduct informal tours of the campus with their guests. We hope to help make the students feel comfortable on campus, and help them to become acquainted with the college atmosphere and facilities."

"The Marist College Theater Guild is presenting its production of the play, "The Lark," and both the play and a reception are open to those who have come to campus."

Students Receive Letters From Cox

by Jerry Profita

In an effort to help students keep in touch with their professors, Dr. John Cox has sent all letters (without giving away his or anyone else's address) to all students who have completed at least one semester at Marist College.

Religious Studies Offers Courses

Some new and exciting things are happening in Religious Studies in the spring of 1975. Dr. John Cox is creating a "New Testament Literature" course. He will explain to his students the history of the New Testament age. Dr. Teng will speak to the students about these hardships and how they led to the establishment of such effort.

Alcoholism Poses Problem

By Bill Hanes

Recent elections, drinking or addiction to alcohol, with its consequences for college students, have been the subject of recent local events. In many states, including New York, there has been an increase in the number of students who have sought help for alcoholism. As a result, many universities have established programs to deal with this problem. One such program is that of Marist College, which offers students the opportunity to participate in a residential rehabilitation center. The program is designed to help students overcome their addiction to alcohol and learn to live a healthy lifestyle. Although the program has been successful in helping many students, it is important to remember that alcoholism is a serious problem that affects all segments of society. We must continue to work towards finding effective solutions to this problem.
The Marist running team finished second in the NCAA Division III Cross Country Championships in Wheeling, Ill. Last year, when Marist placed first, the team included seven runners. This year, Marist placed second, with three runners, one of whom was Andrew Marcellino. The third runner was Ron Ashby, a Marist student who was not on the cross country team but was selected to run for Marist because of his ability and dedication.

The team's performance was especially impressive because the meet was held on the Marist campus, which is located near the race course. The race was held on a cold, windy day, but the Marist runners were able to maintain their pace and make the most of the course.

Individuals to watch this season include Andrew Marcellino, who finished second in the NCAA meet, and Ron Ashby, who placed third. Both runners have a strong chance of qualifying for the NCAA Championships in the spring.

The team's coaches are proud of the students for their hard work and dedication. "We have a great group of runners this year," said Coach Mike Silva. "They are working hard to improve their times and achieve their goals."
