Marist goes Western
by Michael T. Regan
Marist College, currently leasing 5,000 square feet of space in the departmental administration and finance building, will expand to 23,000 square feet as of August 1, according to Edward P. Waters, vice president for administration and finance.
With three classrooms, an office, and space for the art department already in use, the additional 18,000 square feet will mean the addition of at least six more classrooms and an undetermined amount of office space, said Waters.

The agreement, which was completed March 12, is a three-year lease, with the option to renew for another three years, according to Waters. One move should not be construed as something we are steering people into on a temporary basis, he said.

The decision of the move appears to have surprised most people, who said they found out in their last class before break if they were going to be involved in a move.

"We were talking about when they were going to move," said Maureen Keenan, a freshman English major, from Lake Ronkonkoma, N.Y.

The reason for the move during the summer is the lack of time from the last of classes to the week of finals. "It was impossible to publicly announce the move to Western any sooner because of the complex negotiations that were involved in reaching a leasing agreement, according to Waters.

Several parties involved in the negotiations including Marist College, was based in Wisconsin, the lawyers for the proposed buyer, Richard Zunzak, who has an office in New York but is based in California, and the representatives of Marist," Waters said.

The Registrar's office, which Waters said to decide which classes to move had also been aware of the forced evacuation, "I don't know of the negotiations for the move for a while," said Ross.

"But the decision is definitely important if the space after spring break quickly," he said.

The Registrar's office attempted to keep freshmen classes in their Donnelly and move the upper-level courses from each time slot, according to Ross. Some classes could not be moved for specific reasons, though. "Certain classes couldn't be moved because they showed films or were in labs, and keeping the upper floor, Waters said.

Graduate and adult education classes were also moved to create a balance in the building, said Waters. Gas and water were cut off for the overall presence of Marist in the area. Ross said that there was always the problem of classes moving as much as possible.

It was also determined that the move would take place by the computer center, and so the entire art department was moved, said Waters. "Out of the fine arts classes came to me and said it very clearly," Waters said.

It was also determined that the move was decided on short notice, according to Waters.

A letter was sent to the students and faculty members in the art department, said Waters. One faculty member had a mix-up of reaction to the first week of classes. Marist did not want to lose the good feeling that was associated with the move, of understanding the move," said Eileen Taylor Appleby, professor of voice.

The noise problem was attributed to the installation of fire doors, according to Anthony Tarantino, director of physical plant.

"We were forced to work while class was in session last week because of the fire codes which had to be met," he said.

Members of the maintenance staff worked straight days to complete the required work on the building, according to Ross, and were finished as of last Friday. "This was an emergency," he said.

"We were still waiting for some of the materials to come in. My men have been starting work at 5 a.m. to try and get done before the end of the school year," he said.

Waters sees great potential for growth in the building. "Once other corporations and industries begin to move into Western, it will give us an opportunity to interact with the business world in the same building where they have classes," he said.

"There is no way we can do that the same way," said Waters.

"The move will be beneficial for us long term," he said, "not just educationally, but the move will get us closer to the market place, the educational system, and the industries that are involved in," he said.

"Movers' have mixed reactions"

by Kevin Schultz

Upon return from spring break, students who are returning might be surprised that they must cross a busy intersection and walk twice the distance to get to some of their classes. Such is the case for those students and faculty members who had had their classrooms changed to rooms in the old Western Publishing building.

After one week in their new classroom, some relocated students have pointed out the disadvantages of meetings in the old warehouse.

Mark Sullivan, a sophomore sociology major, accounting said: "There are no clocks, no windows, down, there's always noise going on, and there are barely enough chairs for everyone. We practically have to sit on top of each other. Besides that, it smells," he said referring to the peculiar odor of the building.

Marist maintenance crews are currently making modifications to the building's interior. Senior Bob Davies, a political science major, said that the noise was very distracting.

Phillips, Moran, Imperati win
by Kenneth F. Parker Jr.

By a margin of about 80 votes, Anthony Phillips defeated challenger Mark Zangari for the position of student body president in elections earlier this week for the 1984-85 Council of Student Leaders.

In two other races, freshman Paul Moran was elected Inter-House Council president by 60 votes over Gina Coniglio and Darryl Imperati, who was re-elected to the post of Community Union president.

In a third uncontested race, Patrick Hadden became the next chairman of the Student Assembly.

The candidates ran under the title "Students in Action for Action." They included Phillips, Crecca, Hadden, Coniglio and Imperati.

"It is only a matter of time before there is an accident involving students crossing Route 9 to the Western Publishing building," he said. "I am forcing the polls and on 'how the in- Continued on page 2

Marist pollsters make Newsweek
by Carl MacGowan

The reputation of the Marist College Institute of Public Opinion continued to grow last week as Newsweek magazine published a story about the six-year-old polling service.

The story, which appeared in the magazine's March 26 issue in the education section, was titled "The Student Pollsters." The article pleased the institute's director, who described himself in the article as the "Howard Costell of Dutchess County."

Because of the institute's consistent accuracy in telling it like it is, the results of Marist polls have appeared in numerous publications, including Newsweek and The New York Times. Since the article in Newsweek hit the newsstands, Mirroring has received inquiries from Time magazine, as well as NBC and ABC.

"We were very satisfied with the coverage," said Mirroring of the article. Mirroring said he was particularly glad that the story focused on the students who conduct the polls and on "how the in- Continued on page 2

Grant reductions will force closing of refugee program

by Catharine DeNeui

The Refugee Assistance Program, which helps refugees, has been in jeopardy since early July because of a reduction in funds, according to the Social Services director. "There has been a reduction in federal funds, and we've been fortunate to be able to carry on."

The Federal Government has eliminated the Direct Defense Program, which provides legal advice to refugees. The Refugee Assistance Program, which helps to develop employment opportunities for refugees, is also in jeopardy.

"We have been able to help refugees through this crisis because we have been able to maintain a small staff," said Mr. DeNeui.

The program is expected to continue through the end of the year, but it is uncertain whether the program will be able to continue beyond that time.

Mondale delegate reflects:

Things look good in NY

by John Allen

Realizing New Yorkers will have the chance to show their favorite colors to the world this week, Mondale delegate Josh Goodman said that New Yorkers will be "proud of our state."

"It's a big idea that is important to New Yorkers," he said. "It's a great idea that is important to New Yorkers."
Warehouse material?

"They're tearing down the blackboards in my classroom," one Marist faculty member said bitterly into the phone.

"Whom?" I asked, "Your work area?"

"No, my classroom," he explained. "A lot of the old blackboards have been torn down in my room."

"Oh," I said, "I think they've been replaced with dry-erase boards."

"Yes," he said, "but I've heard that they're gonna be used for a different purpose."

"What's that?"

"The math department is using them for recitation rooms."

"That's interesting," I said. "I didn't know they were being used for that."

"Yes," he said, "and I think they're gonna be used as study rooms as well."

"That's a good idea," I said. "I think they'll be useful for students."

Students finish 200-mile trek

by Paul Rauzi

They left Boston’s Prudential Tower on April 11 and arrived at the Flushing Meadows-Corona Park in Queens, N.Y., late on April 15, having traveled a total of 200 miles. They were a part of the Marist College’s Special Services program, which is dedicated to helping those with special needs.

The group, which numbered around 40, included students, faculty, and staff members. They started their journey by taking the train to Boston, where they were greeted by a large crowd of supporters. The weather was cold and rainy, but that didn’t stop them from continuing on their way.

They walked through the streets of Boston, taking in the sights and sounds of the city. They then made their way to New York City, where they were met with even more enthusiasm. The group was accompanied by a van full of supplies, including food, water, and medical equipment.

During their journey, they encountered many obstacles, including heavy traffic, construction sites, and inclement weather. But they persevered, and eventually arrived at their destination.

The group was greeted by a large crowd of supporters, who cheered and applauded them as they arrived. They were met with a warm welcome, and were given a tour of the Flushing Meadows-Corona Park, which is a popular destination for visitors.

The Special Services program is an important part of Marist College, and provides valuable experience and training for its students. They are proud to have been a part of this year’s trek, and look forward to continuing their work in the future.

The students were also grateful for the support they received along the way. They were able to count on their friends and family to keep them motivated, and they were always ready to lend a helping hand.

In the end, the group was able to accomplish what they set out to do. They were able to finish the 200-mile trek, and they are proud of themselves for doing so. They are grateful for the opportunity to make a difference, and they look forward to continuing their work in the future.

MCCTA will make kids smile with ‘The Frog Prince’

by Catherine DeGennaro

The Marist College Theater Company will be presenting the musical ‘The Frog Prince’ this weekend. The production will run from Friday, April 19 to Sunday, April 21, and will be held in the Martin Chapel.

‘The Frog Prince’ is a classic fairy tale that has been retold many times over the years. The story follows a young princess who is visited by a frog, who transforms her into a princess. The princess must then find a way to break the spell before it’s too late.

The production will be directed by Jack Gallagher, who is the head of the theater department at Marist College. The cast and crew have been working hard to bring this beloved story to life.

The Marist College Theater Company is a popular destination for theater lovers in the area. They have a reputation for putting on high-quality productions, and they are known for their innovative and creative approach to theater.

The ‘The Frog Prince’ will be a fun and entertaining production for all ages. The cast and crew have put in a lot of hard work, and they are excited to share their production with the community.

The show will be held in the Martin Chapel, and tickets will be available at the door. For more information, please visit the Marist College Theater Company’s website.

Marist Brothers want founder canonized

By Terry Ahbd

The Marist Brothers are currently considering a worldwide movement to canonize Marcellin Champagnat, the founder of Marist education.

Blessed Marcellin Champagnat founded the Marist Brothers in 1817. There are over 2,000 Marist Brothers in over 100 countries around the world.

The movement to canonize Champagnat is led by the Marist General Congregation, which has jurisdiction over all Marist communities worldwide. The movement is supported by the Marist Brothers, Marist Lay Apostles, and Marist Lay Volunteers.

Champagnat was known for his commitment to education and social justice. He founded Marist schools and colleges, and worked to provide education to the poor. He also founded the Marist Missionary Sisters, who continue to work in education and social service.

The canonization process involves several steps, including the investigation of the candidate's life and work, the examination of the candidate's possible miracles, and the approval of the candidate's sainthood by the Pope.

The Marist Brothers are currently in the process of investigating Champagnat's life and work, and are working to gather evidence to support his canonization.

The canonization process can take many years, and the final decision to canonize Champagnat will be made by the Pope.
European coach Perry is Petro's successor

by Michael R. Murphy

Marist College sophomore Peter Pazak and Peter Cotroneo ran one-two in the 15-kilometer race, respectively in the 15-kilometer race, in the seventh annual Inaugural Run road race held at Dutchess Community College last Sunday.

Meanwhile, Senior Ken Bohan, co-captain of the Marist track team, finished seventh in the 5-kilometer event with a time of 16:47.

Pazak, from Utica, N.Y., was second in the open age group division with a time of 15:57 while Colleague of Cedar Knolls, N.J., was fourth in that division with a time of 16:01.

All three Marist runners used the race as preparation for the outdoor track season, "I have been hurt for a while and have just started serious training again," said Pazak, "I used this race as an opportunity to work out and see how my condition is." Cotroneo, a junior, said he was satisfied with his fifth-place effort, "I had a good run and was able to place in the top ten." The three runners will join the rest of the Marist track team when it begins competition in early spring.

Approximately 200 runners participated in the 5-kilometer and 15-kilometer races. The race was sponsored by the Mid-Hudson Valley Road Runners Club.

Freshmen in top 3 at DCC road race

by Michael R. Murphy

Although the 1984 collegiate football season is still six months away, the Marist College football team already began preparations for its competitive season. The Red Foxes cannot practice officially until an NCAA Division Three rule that prohibits teams from practicing until 20 days before their first game.

Hoping to improve their 1983 record of 5-4, a significant number of new players have unofficially begun an extensive weight training program, according to Head Coach Mike Malet.

"Last year we may have had 20 percent of our team involved in an off-season weight training program. This year we have 40 percent of the team involved with some kind of weight training with the coaching staff and myself could not be more happy about it," said Malet.

Malet said he attributes the high percentage of participation in the program to factors: a new sense of conviction among student-athletes and an improved weight training equipment.

"There is a strong commitment within the team and among the individual's own physical strength and we have found that it is a very important role last season. We lost a couple games because guys broke through our tackles. And that deals with physicality and technique."

The new weight training equipment was anonymously donated to the football team, according to Malet.

Malet said the weight training program is going well so far. "Last Saturday we had 49 people perform in a weight training test. I was pleased with the results. We even had three people bench press over 400 pounds, which we have never had before," said Malet.

The Holt of six seniors, including quarterback Jim Cleary, hurts the team, but Malet said he is still optimistic about next year. "I have got to stress that there is a strong commitment by the team to improve. We have the talent and we are doing the work," said Malet.

In relation to new recruits, Malet said there are 40 to 50 people he is interested in. Head Coach Mike Malet, joined by Cammie Steffich, Joyce, a running back from Our Lady of Mercy High School in Peekskill.

Malet stressed the fact that it is difficult to replace a starting fulltime coaching staff, but he tries to fill the spots of the six seniors who graduated four years ago.

"I have stressed the fact that the type of personnel that's the way it seems like it is going to take," said he.

Crew flew south for spring training

by Cammie Steffich

The Marist College crew team has returned from a week in Florida, ready to tackle the rest of the season.

"We should do well in our conference," said Mike Masterson, a graduate of Providence College where he was a second-team all-Big East Conference Basketball Tournament, and we had a 12-8,- record and were fourth in Division One.

We played well against LIU, and we are doing the work," said Masterson.

"Ron has been working on this program for years," said Perry, "I just want to con­ continue what he has started."

Prior to 1982, when he began in France, Perry coached the Swedish team at the 1980 Olympics in Moscow and, from 1975-1977, the Belgian team in Europe. Perry has also been in charge of national basketball programs in West Ger­ many and Saudi Arabia.

Perry said he would be recruiting Euro­ pean players but that his would not become a "European team." He said he thinks it's important to try to build a team that lives up to that ideal.
