Champagnat targeted for energy conservation

by LouAnn Seelig

A long-term solution to the deterioration of Champagnat Hall walls is to prove in court for the first time that a multi-million dollar energy-conservation "would solve the problems of heat, condensation, drafts from the windows," said Tarantino.

However, he said it is unable to estimate how long it will be before the new program goes into effect.

We have two short-term options. We can continue plastering the walls and they'll open up again, or we can put moldings up and anchor it to the ceiling," said Tarantino.

Tarantino said it would be easier to repair the walls when the building is empty so that his staff would not disrupt the residents, but residence continue to live in plain of light and noise that pass through the space at the ceilings.

"Which is the worst inconvenience, going in there and tearing it apart or the noise? The choice is theirs," Tarantino said.

According to a memo Tarantino sent to Vice President Edward Waters in October, the separations are not dangerous. "The walls...are free standing walls dividing the structural areas of the building. This is not a structural bearing wall and should have no effect on the building," he said.

Marist students 'sibling' to local youngsters

by Brian O'Connor

"You get a satisfaction in helping children who need some extra attention," Montanaro said. "You want the kid to open to campus. When they go shopping, rollerskating or when they go shopping, rollerskating or..."

Montanaro said. "You want the kid to open up to you first. Your role is not to change them, but to help them open up to you for some advice." Montanaro said he sees "a kid or two" a week for two to five hours, when they go shopping, rollerskating or come to campus.

Montanaro said he hopes to continue the program next year, but said he would like to get a little brother from a more troubled family. His advice is to "not want to remain close friends with Duane."

Murphy, from Highland, N.Y., became involved in the program in December, because she said she wanted to help out a child who wasn't as fortunate as herself.

"I had a very good childhood and I felt sorry for the kids that I've seen here who have a hard life," she said. "I want the chance to share what I had with a little sister."

Murphy's little sister is 7-year-old Shannon Murphy, who said she comes from a low income home. "She's not used to getting so much attention. When she's around my family she's the center of attention and she shys away from it," Murphy said. "She's a very affectionate girl." Murphey continued on page 9
Ulster County looks at constructive alternatives to jail

by Barbara Bull

County may develop some alternatives to the traditional system of construction and incarceration by developing non-traditional and innovative programs to deal with the growing number of jail inmates. It has been suggested that the county take a different approach to the problem of over-crowded jail facilities. According to Sheriff William Williams, the county's jail population has increased dramatically in recent years, due to the high number of arrests for non-violent offenses. He has recommended that the county consider developing a community-based alternative to incarceration, such as work release programs or treatment centers, to reduce the number of inmates in the jail. Although these alternatives may be expensive, they are considered more humane and effective than traditional methods of incarceration. The county has also considered developing a mental health treatment center for inmates with mental health issues. This would provide a more appropriate setting for these individuals, who may benefit from specialized treatment. In addition, the county has considered developing a substance abuse treatment program for inmates who suffer from drug or alcohol addiction. This would provide a more effective way of addressing this problem, as the traditional system of incarceration is not designed to treat addiction. The county has also considered developing a program to help inmates who have completed their sentence to find employment, housing, and other resources to make a successful transition back into society. This would provide a more successful outcome for inmates, as they would have the skills and resources needed to reintegrate into society. When telephone credit abuse ran through the dorms, the Marist administration was careful to keep the problem invisible. At last, last fall, the CITE report, which was estimated at $18,000, was completed. The report, a total of 115 pages, was released yesterday at a meeting of the Marist College Senate. After meeting with representatives of the administration, the Senate released a statement condemning the abuse and expressing concern for the victims of the abuse.

The administration has been working with the FBI to gather evidence and has arrested several students. In addition, the administration has not yet decided whether to suspend any of the accused students. A spokesman for the college said that the administration is following its usual procedures and will announce its decision when ready.

The Senate called on the administration to take a stronger stance against credit abuse and to work with students to develop a healthier campus culture. The Senate also called for increased security measures, including increased surveillance and stricter enforcement of existing policies.

The administration has acknowledged that the credit abuse was a serious problem and has promised to take steps to address it. However, the administration has been criticized for its slow response to the problem and for not taking more immediate action. Some students have called for the administration to suspend or expel the accused students and to implement stricter policies to prevent future abuse.

The Senate urged the administration to take seriously the concerns of the students and to work with them to develop a healthier campus culture. The Senate also called for increased transparency and accountability from the administration.

The administration has promised to work with the Senate and other student groups to address the credit abuse and to develop a healthier campus culture. The administration has also promised to release a report on the credit abuse and to implement new policies to prevent future abuse.

The Senate praised the administration for its efforts to address the credit abuse and called on the administration to continue its work. The Senate also urged the administration to take seriously the concerns of the students and to work with them to develop a healthier campus culture.

Is there hope for prime-time television?

By Anthony DeRosa

The sun is setting over New York City, and the streets are crowded. A woman is walking down the street, looking at her cell phone. Suddenly, she hears a noise and turns around. It's a man with a gun. She starts running, but he追上了她. She runs as fast as she can, but he's close behind her. She turns a corner and sees a building. She tries to run inside, but he pushes her against a wall and points the gun at her. She's terrified.

This is a scene from a new prime-time television series. The series is called "Crime Watch," and it's a police procedural show set in New York City. The main characters are Detective Jane Doe and Detective John Smith. They work together to solve crimes in the city, and they're always trying to stay one step ahead of the criminals.

"Crime Watch" has been a huge success so far. It's been renewed for a second season, and it's already made a name for itself in the world of prime-time television. The show has been praised for its realistic portrayal of police work and its focus on the psychological aspects of crime solving.

For those who might be skeptical, "Crime Watch" is truly a must-watch. The actors are talented, the writing is engaging, and the storylines are compelling. If you're a fan of police procedurals, then you'll love "Crime Watch."
The right thing

There is no good in Madoffs taught. Good news, anybody actually good news for anyone who is not a fan of the sordid and often entertaining world of sports. In the world of sports, there are certain things that are committed in public, and there are certain things that are committed in private. The official student body supports the affair on the football field. But we are, after all, after all, after all. There are certain things that wear as part of this, you know, religious thing, and it's like we're taught in the situation around some when you're supposed to be doing his administration.

This is the season in which more than one man has been known to die in a car crash after becoming too close to his intended target. The term "grand slam" is no longer used by the sports media to describe a player's success. The term is now reserved for a player who has yet to reach his potential. For example, a player who has never scored more than one home run in a single season is considered a "grand slam." Murray: NCAA will penalize hoop program

Collegiate Athletic Association.

The purpose of the investigation was to determine which of the former Head Coach Perry's violations would be penalized by the NCAA, and said the process will only take place after the case is closed. The NCAA will send the report regarding the violations on Friday. The investigator came to the conclusion that the former Head Coach Perry's violations are relatively minor.

Women hoopsters beat Colgate, lose to Monmouth last week

The Marist women's basketball team lost a doubleheader to CCNY, 58-56 and 50-49, on Sunday.

The game on the road in Mon­mouth is 50-32 all-time.

"This is not the year to be connected in the last few years. Although Women's was high score with 16 points, everybody came through in the last few minutes. With 1 minute and 15.4 seconds left, Karen Enraker put in 2 from the free throw line for the win.

While Women's编制 the offensive game plan, Wagner's defense was solid. The difference in the game was in the first half when Wagner led, 13-3. Women's was outscored 10-0 over the last 10 minutes of the first half. Wagner led, 40-20 at halftime.

Jim Todd, one of the assistant coaches, has worked with me all year and I owe him a lot of credit," Smits said.

Off the basketball court, the blond-haired giant wants to live the life of a typical American college student. Since he has been at Marist, his whole life has changed. He is enjoying himself, he says, and wants to spend four years playing "in the McCann Center. "I love it here. The students are really nice and have made me feel welcome and at home," he said.

Smits has not acquired a taste for the college's cafeteria food, so he goes out to eat "as much as possible." He prefers Italian and Mexican foods, but also likes hamburgers, vegetable soup and fruit. "God, I really miss the food at home," he says laughingly.

The Holland native said he's adapted to American culture well and especially likes American music and television. Smits' favorite musician is Bruce Springsteen. He said that he likes most TV shows and has learned a lot of English by watching the tube.

What does Smits enjoy most about Marist College thus far? "My girlfriend is really important to me. She's helped me the most... I've never been in so much love with anyone before," he said. "It's crazy."

Rik's parents came to America to see him play during the last two weeks in January. "That was a big thrill for me," he said. "At first I was really nervous, but then I played the way I knew I could." Rik plans to return to Einhoven with his girlfriend for three weeks over the summer to visit his parents and friends. He will be able to show them his personal scrapbook, collected this season "game-by-game performances of a Red Fox.

Smits continues to improve with each game and has developed some talents that he would like to show off. "I want to dunk the ball more and get the crowd excited and into the game," he said, adding that he wants to become stronger and "play to work out with weights over the summer to enhance his aggressiveness and position under the basket."

"If I want to make the pros, I have to build myself up. I have to push myself very hard and try not to get lazy at workouts. I am going to do this, and I will definitely get better," he said.

That kind of confidence and personality is what Rik Smits carries with him while at Marist College, both on and off the basketball court. He likes the people and the people certainly seem to like him. He's on top of the world right now, and is having the time of his life.
