Campus focus moves east as Western grows by Janet McLoughlin

With this September's addition of additional class rooms to the West Hall building, the campus will now hold almost twice as many classrooms as it did in 1974.

The need for increased classroom space came with increased enrollment, a larger variety of courses being offered and the expanding Core program.

Higgins donates funds to college by William Hare

To Marist College students, John Higgins is more than just a custodian. "He's my mother, father, counselor, banker and confessor," said Higgins, who has worked for Marist since 1974.

Now he can add one more label to his list — that of donor. As he became custodian, one of his tasks was to janitorially physical space for students to work in and have a capacity of 30 to 40 students.

Originally, Marist leased 5,000 square feet from the Western Publishing building and expanded it to 22,000 square feet last August. With the new addition, Marist will now lease 36,000 square feet on the entire floor.

"Where would we be without Western," he said. "This has been an enormous opportunity for us."

Waters said that the new addition will also mean more students crossing Route 9. Waters said that the idea of constructing an overpass or underpass would not be feasible because it would be too expensive to reconstruct piping along the road, and also, Marist would not want to lose the land, nor use them.

The building being considered was to have a long "walk" light, but Waters said that the Department of Transportation wouldn't go along with the idea because it would be a trap for drivers, so there has been no change in the way conditions, according to Waters.

Final word awaited on Senior Week plan by Mary A. Wall

The administration still has not announced a decision whether or not to approve Senior Week after students damaged $3,000 worth of college property during River Day last week.

Dean of Students Gerard Cox is expected to announce later this week his decision regarding Senior Week, according to William Hare.

Prior to River Day, the administration had received complaints about all Senior Week activities if senior class officers did not agree on all Senior Week activities. Some of the complaints were regarding the vandalism and alcohol abuse that had marked the city of the unofficial holiday in recent years.

Senior Week is a series of social events held between the last day of the fall semester and the day of the Commencement.

The administration and senior officers did arrive at agreement the day before River Day regarding Senior Week activities. The administration was able to stop some of the damage.

Senior Class President Anthony Tarantino, a 1989 graduate and assistant director of admissions at Marist, said the decision was Cox's and that he was examining the situation before a decision was announced.

"Yeaglin said that the senior class was trying to plan other activities for the senior class the events for the week."

Jim Murphy, senior class president, said that the administration was concerned about whether or not the administration would use other plans for Senior Week. "I think permission for Senior Week will be granted," said Murphy.

Rebecca Wall, coordinator of college activities, were concentrating on trying to identify and contact the individuals involved.

"I'm sure they'll remember, things he taught them over, what they learn in the classroom after they leave Marist!"

Heywood said that Higgins is one of the few people who can first teach him. "He has a tremendous rapport with students," said Heywood. "I'm sure they'll remember, things he taught them over, what they learn in the classroom after they leave Marist!

Heywood, Housing Director at Marist, is a perfect example of someone who has received Higgins' "work first, play later" lecture. "One day during the first week of working at Marist," Heywood said, "I decided to close the office a little early so that I could enjoy the nice day. The next day John told me I shouldn't have been so early and that I'm supposed to keep this office open.

One-to-one day makes kids smile by Scott Scala

A small happy-face sticker, a kiss and a hug were all that was needed to turn two strangers into loving friends last week as Marist's "One-to-One" Day. As he stepped off a flat, five-year-old Jeff, a mute, was instantly greeted with a kiss and hug by Marist freshman Debbi Vincent.

Jeff was one of 28 youngsters who arrived from the Rehabilitation Programs Corporation and the Cardinal Hayes Home for Children last Thursday to participate in the event.

The program was designed by the psychology department to provide disabled children with a friend for the day from Marist College.

"I first takes by Vincent to the activities desk to receive his name tag and sticker. Then he took Vincent to the various art classes and parks to paint, according to Edward Waters, vice president for administration and finance.

"The rooms will be located at the back Vinci in the various departments, along with eight new Marist offices. According to Waters, the rooms will be large and more suitable for the students to work in and have a capacity of 30 to 40 students.

I also see half the skin off of my right hand trying to shave the other.

After running the obstacle course, Waters and the other students in the wheelchair were "rushed" to the finish line. The "winning" time was 6 minutes and 45 seconds.

Marist's invisible students

by Warren Barry

As a part of the many media surrounding the Goetz case, the Marist community has been a frequent target for the media. The community of Marist students is comprised of over 8,000 people, but the media often ignores the voices of the students. The students of Marist are invisible, and their voices are never heard.

I am writing this article as an attempt to raise awareness of the invisible students at Marist. These students are the ones who do business in South Africa. They are the ones who work for IBM because they believe in the company's mission. These students are the ones who pay their tuition and do work-study programs. These students are the ones who are invisible.

Ring ceremony '85

By Rosemary Olsen

The home of Franklin D. Roosevelt, known now as the FDR Monument, was the site of the annual ring ceremony for Marist College students.

The ceremony, which is held to honor the students' academic achievements, was attended by the college's president, Dr. John W. Coleman, and other dignitaries.

The ceremony included the presentation of the ring to the students, who were selected based on their academic performance.

In addition to the ring ceremony, the event also featured a speech by the college's president, Dr. John W. Coleman, who spoke about the importance of education and the role of the college in the community.

The ceremony was well-attended, with hundreds of students and their families in attendance.

More than just Marist in the Hudson Valley

By Tom McManus

An exhibit of 16 paintings by Marist professor Milton Reicher began last Monday in the College's Art Gallery.

The exhibit, which features works by Reicher and other Marist faculty members, is on display until May 11.

The exhibition is part of a larger project, "The Hudson Valley: A Multidisciplinary Approach," which is being coordinated by the college's art department.

In related news, the college has announced plans to construct a new art building on campus.

The new building will include state-of-the-art studios and galleries, as well as a large outdoor sculpture garden.

The groundbreaking for the new building is scheduled for next year, with completion expected in 2021.

Laxmen pound Dowling after losing to Drew

by John Condon

After splitting two games last weekend, the Catholic University men's lacrosse team headed to New Jersey to face the team from Drew University, ranked fifth in the nation. The result was a 17-4 victory for the Catholic team, and a 12-6 loss to Drew in the season opener.

The game against Drew was the first of the season for both teams, and they started off with a bang. Catholic, led by All-American Mike Reuss, scored early in the game, and never looked back. Drew, on the other hand, struggled to keep up with the Catholic pace, and found itself trailing by a 5-0 score after the first quarter.

Catholic continued its dominance in the second quarter, scoring 7 goals to lead 12-0 at halftime. Drew managed to score 3 goals in the second half, but Catholic held off a late rally to win 17-4.

Reuss, who finished the game with 5 goals and 2 assists, said that the win was pleasing to see after the tough loss to Drew in the season opener. "The game was a wake-up call for us," he said. "We need to focus on our fundamentals and improve our defense if we want to be successful this season."
