The Academic Affairs Committee is discussing plans for a new honors program and has decided to have the faculty vote on the proposal later this semester, according to Margaret Gold, chairman of the Academic Affairs Committee.

The new program would consist of a college-wide standard that would be approved by the entire faculty. If the faculty votes to accept the program, each department would have the freedom to design its own program. However, each program must conform to college-wide standards.

The department programs would have to be approved by a special committee, according to the current proposal.

The proposed honors program would be within the major field and would not require students to take courses outside of their major field. It would be similar to the Science of Man, the unofficial honors program that existed last Spring, required seven faculty members and one student representative, sets academic policy and possibly writing a thesis. The proposal is not new, and would have the option of drafting the honors program and possibly writing a thesis. The proposal is not new, and was drawn up as an honors committee of seven faculty members and one student representative, according to the current proposal.

The Academic Affairs Committee (AAC) has made proposals that could change, she added. The AAC, composed of five professors and one student representative, sets academic policy for the college.

A new honors program was to be implemented in this fall, but the AAC did not discuss the matter during the spring semester. Gold, who became Academic Affairs Committee chairman in September, said the problem with the nursing program last year was the main reason the committee failed to meet its original time schedule.

The honors committee's proposal was sent to the AAC last January, according to Richard LaPietra, a member of the committee.

The proposal represented a comprehensive review of honors courses on some issues and a majority when a consensus could not be reached, according to LaPietra, who expressed disappointment at some parts of the final product, but decided to discuss it more specifically.

The class of 1990 will be the last class offered the Science of Man. In the first year the program had trouble retaining students, according to Robert Lewis, a professor in the program. The difficulty of the courses and the idea of writing a thesis paper discouraged many students from remaining in the program, said Lewis.

In addition, when Core requirements changed three years ago, Science of Man students were no longer exempt from Core courses, Lewis said.

Lewis also said that many students dropped out of the program because they felt they deserved a greater level of recognition for their work. With its unofficial status, Science of Man does not earn students honors recognition.

A walk through Marist's past

Jonna Spilbor, a senior from Lowell and the alums of the Science of Man does not earn honors requirements set by the Food and Drug Administration, Fredericks said.

In an attempt to educate students about AIDS and help prevent the transmission of the deadly disease, SUNY New Paltz has chosen condom vending machines as a means to promote safe sex.

"We're not encouraging sexual activity," said Jim Fredericks, executive director of the Campus Auxiliary Services. "But at the same time, the surgeon general says that anyone who is sexually active should be using condoms. We want to make them readily available."

The CAS is in charge of the college's vending machines, food services and bookstores. The group's board of directors — four students and two members each of the faculty and administration — sold the idea of the vending machines to the administration last spring.

During the summer the school purchased and installed machines in dormitory laundry rooms and the campus health center. The vending company's research showed that more condoms were sold in the women's restrooms than in the men's restroom, but Fredericks said the college wanted convenient access for both sexes. Of the school's 7,500 students, Fredericks said 2,500 are dormitory residents.

"There's been a lot. Most of the machines are running out of them," said senior Mike Duchan, an activity assistant at the Student Union Building involved with refilling the machines.

"It's an excellent idea," Eschbar said. "By having them so accessible you don't have to go the distance — walk or drive — to get them. They're right there for you."

The price is very affordable too.

The machines, each of which dispense 175 condoms for 50 cents apiece, were bought for about $180 each, according to Fredericks. The vending companies — Pronex and Proved — are not major brands, they meet standard requirements set by the Food and Drug Administration, Fredericks said.

Brand name condoms — Trojan and Femidom — can be bought, in packages of three for $1.70 in the health and beauty aids section of the campus bookstore.

Condoms can also be bought in packages of two in some campus cigarette machines for the same price as cigarettes — $1.40.

Each vending condom costs the college 20 cents and profits are channeled to the health center for brochures and educational programs on AIDS and safe sex, Fredericks said.

AIDS — acquired immune deficiency syndrome — is caused by a virus that damages the body's immune system, leaving victims susceptible to infections and cancers. It is spread most often through sexual contact, needles or syringes shared by drug users, infected blood, and from pregnant women to their infants at birth.

There is no known cure for AIDS.

Surgeon General C. Everett Koop has determined that next to smoking, condoms are the most effective way to avoid getting AIDS.

Night hours extended for classes

Night classes on Wednesdays and Thursdays will be extended by 15 minutes if a majority of students vote to meet at last night's Big Brother Big Sister mixer. More than 300 upperclassmen attended the event at the Marist College Administration Center.

Each of Marist's 762 freshman class members was assigned an upperclassmen "big bro" or "little sis" to take them around the campus on April 28, 1984, has not been completely reorganized, according to Fleming. "When you're talking about 1,000 members, it's not a chapter," said Fleming.

The freshmen who were not able to speak out on the topic of "big brother" or "little sister" were told that they could choose from a list of 11 chapters to learn more about the mixer. To the Editor:

As a concerned student at Marist College, I am writing to express my dissatisfaction with the recent decision to change the campus layout and replace Champagnat Hall with a shopping mall.

Champagnat Hall has been an integral part of the Marist community for many years. It is a place where students can find comfort and connection with one another. The idea of turning it into a commercial space is not only disrespectful to the traditions of Marist College but also fails to recognize the value that such a building brings to the campus.

I understand that there may be financial pressures to make such a change, but there are alternative solutions that could be explored. For instance, the space could be used for student housing, allowing us to accommodate more students and maintain the academic integrity of the college. Alternatively, the existing buildings could be renovated to meet modern needs, ensuring that Marist remains a welcoming and supportive environment.

I urge the administration to consider these alternatives and to engage in a dialogue with students, faculty, and alumni before making any final decisions. It is important that we preserve the character and spirit of Marist College, which is more than just a place of learning; it is a community where we grow and develop as individuals.

Sincerely,

Armored Saint raises fear

by Jeff Nicoula

You back yard? Yes, for the third week in a row you have stood yourself in the middle of the street and announced, "I'm the best guitarist in the world!"

I don't think so. It's true Armored Saint is not a household name, but the band has been making a name for itself in the heavy metal scene for a few years now. The band has played sold-out shows across the country and has even been compared to bands like Judas Priest and Metallica.

Still, most people don't know who they are. It's like being invisible to everyone except the fans. But don't worry, Armored Saint is on the rise. Just wait till they hit the big time.

By now, you're probably thinking, "Who the hell is Armored Saint?" Don't worry, we'll get to that. But first, let's talk about the band's latest album, "Freaky Friday.

The album is the band's third release and it features a mix of heavy metal and thrash metal. The lead single, "March of The Armored," has been a hit on the rock charts and the album as a whole has received critical acclaim. If you haven't heard it yet, do yourself a favor and check it out.

So there you have it. Armored Saint is here to stay. They may not be the biggest band in the world, but they are definitely one of the best. So next time you're out in public and you hear someone announce, "I'm the best guitarist in the world!" just smile and say, "I'm sure they are."
U.S. ignored Holocaust, Marist speaker says
by Karen Cicero

The American government and people had little concern for the European Jews victimized by the Holocaust, historian David S. Wyman said at the Marist Foundation last week. Wyman, author of the recently released book "The Abandonment of the Jews," was the guest speaker at the Noon Forum sponsored by the Marist Layman's Association.

Wyman exposed the lack of U.S. support for the Jews, as well as continued denial by President Franklin D. Roosevelt's administration to keep news of their plight out of the United States.

Wyman said that FDR was artful and that the United States had no intention of rescuing the Jews even over a three-and-a-half year period. He also mentioned that it wasn't until Roosevelt was found dead in his bed that the United States started to do anything about rescuing the Jews. Wyman was really informative.

Communication arts alums get a taste of what they missed
by Mike Grayeb

As 1975 grad Quinlan walked through the halls of the Communications Center for the first time, he exclaimed, "I'm so excited and I'm twenty years older).

"I was here before," said Quinlan, a 1975 Communications Center graduate who currently produces a TV series for the local ABC network. "When I was here, the communication arts department was just developing.

"For me, it was like being back in college," said Quinlan. "But they've finally caught up." Quinlan, a sophomore year, it's nice to see it is now.

The center, officially opened last January, lacked completed television and radio production facilities. "I'm amazed and so insanely happy," said Cannon, a 1986 graduate. "We were promised it would be in broadcast quality."

"If we had facilities like this, it would have been so much easier," said a 1986 graduate. "We were promised it would be in broadcast quality."

Some graduates said they expected better equipment in the fine arts center, and others said the center has the potential to help both. "We were promised it would be in broadcast quality."

"When I left Marist in 1977, I had never had the opportunity to put my hands on equipment like this," said Quinlan. "I was amazed and so insanely happy."

"When I was here, the communica­tion and radio production facilities were not completed," said Cannon. "I thought they were going to be complete by the end of the year." Cannon is the director of radio station WABC and a 1986 graduate.

With lower profile, coalition carries on
by Alan Silver

A coalition that recruited a small group of students who were among the first in New York City to demand the American government and people to do more to help the Jews during the Holocaust, is being quietly suspended by the American government and people.

According to Larry Meisel, the coalition's leader, the coalition was being funded by the American government and people to do more to help the Jews during the Holocaust, is being quietly suspended by the American government and people.

Fab Four are back in fashion

By Laura Soifer

By 9 p.m., the line extended from the theater to the offices of a local catering company. Feeling the heat from the late summer sun, the fans waited patiently. Inside the theater, the Fab Four performed a private concert for college students and fans alike. As the lights dimmed and the band took the stage, the audience roared in excitement.

The Fab Four, a tribute band, performed a setlist similar to that of the original Beatles. The crowd was captivated as they sang hits like "I Want to Hold Your Hand," "Yesterday," and "Let It Be." The audience was on their feet, singing along and cheering as the band played with energy and passion.

After the concert, some of the audience members shared their thoughts on the experience. "It was like a trip back in time," said one student. "I could see the Beatles on stage, and it was amazing." Another added, "The music was incredible. I loved every second of it." The Fab Four even surprised the audience by playing a few requests from the audience.

The Fab Four is just one of many tribute bands that bring classic music to life for modern audiences. Whether it's the Beatles, The Rolling Stones, or any other classic band, these tribute acts help keep the music alive and bring joy to fans of all ages. So if you have a chance to see a tribute band perform, don't miss out! You just might be transported back in time to the glory days of rock and roll.
Woodhour leads rugby to victory by Annie Breslin

The Marist College rugby team split the first two matches of its fall season, defeating Vassar 21-6 at home Saturday and falling to Drew 15-13 in Madison, N.J., Oct. 3.

The Red Foxes will travel to Siena College Saturday to take on the Hawks at 1 p.m.

The Red Foxes were led by the strong offensive play of freshman Justin Meise and junior Jason Thomas.

Marist scored its only points resulted from a successful field goal attempt.

The Red Foxes second touchdown was set up by a 41-yard pass from Thomas to Michael Zeppe.

Woodhour gave way to October woes facing Marist's second official finisher, placed 20th. Maryanne Casey is a creature of extremes. Marist College senior Maryanne Casey is a creature of extremes.

According to Casey, volleyball is not as disciplined.

"I don't think there is any one thing bothering them," said Goldman. "We made potential mistakes in our defense, but they could let it go down the tubes. I have faith in their ability." Marist's men's and women's volleyball teams will travel Saturday to Stonestown Island's Clove Lakes Park for the ECAC Metro Championships. Last year, both squads finished second.

"We're only getting one pass and while in high school, but played really well today," said Goldman. "They've got to get their act together and decide what they want to do," Goldman said. "They've got to get their act together and decide what they want to do," Goldman said.
