Reasoner to receive Marist honor

by Steven Murray

Marist College will present the 1988 Lowell Thomas Award to Harry Reasoner, CBS news correspondent and co-editor of the news program "60 Minutes," at the Mansion Palazzo in New York City on Thursday, April 28.

The award is given to an outstanding individual in the communications industry whose life and work reflect the high standards of the late broadcaster Lowell Thomas.

It will also present the Alumni Communication Achievement Award to Jack Geoghan, a Marist alumnus in 1962 and who has made significant progress in communication.

Reasoner, who began his career in journalism in 1942, will be the six recipient of the Thomas award which was established in 1972.

Howard X. Smith, Douglas Edwards and David Brinkley are among those who have been recipients of the Thomas award.

"This is an honor which is especially touching because of the admiration and love I have for the work of Lowell Thomas, a man who has left such a profound mark on the journalism world," Reasoner said.

Marking the award is the Marist College, Poughkeepsie, N.Y., April 14, 1988

Officer's murder spurs friend into action

by Chris Landry

As Bill Cordo walked out of St. James Catholic Church in Seaford, N.Y., the drizzly February weather added to a somber mood.

The crowd stood six deep along both sides of the street as the Necker Island drug dealers, Lorenzo "Fat" Byrne, 22, was laid to rest.

The dreary February weather added to a somber mood. The crowd stood six deep along eight city blocks as it watched the green, blue and white flag draped coffin of rookie Police Officer Edward Byrne proceed from the church's steps.

Cordo's godparents — Byrne's mother and father — gripped each other as they walked in the funeral procession.

They told us about it after the election.

Although this was one reason, other problems also arose.

The first election's ballots were for the Commuter Union president and the commuters were voting for Residence Student Council President.

Also, the polls were not open for 2 full days, according to the voting count in the college community office.

There were also complaints of candidates campaigning on election day but no one appealed to the judicial board about this problem, said Ferony.

The other Thomas award

by Mary Strickler

"There is no one working in broadcast journalism today who better exemplifies the spirit, ambition and humanity of Lowell Thomas than Harry Reasoner," Cernera said.

"Marist College is very pleased to be honoring a man of his stature in 1988." About 150 guests are expected to attend the award luncheon which will begin at 11:45 a.m. The cost of the lunch is $20 per plate.

Reasoner, the winner of three Emmys including one as "News Broadcaster of the Year," has been honored with such awards as the Overseas Press Club of America award for the best television documentary of foreign affairs and a Peabody Award for outstanding contribution to television news.

After 14 years with CBS, Reasoner left in 1970 to become an anchor of the "ABC Evening News" where he served as chief correspondent in Peking for President Nixon's trip to China. He also co-anchored election night coverage of the 1972, 1974 and 1976 Presidential elections as well as the inaugurations of 1973 and 1977.

Reasoner returned to CBS in 1978 as correspondent and co-editor of "60 Minutes," which he and Mike Wallace originally co-edited when the show premiered in 1968.

Following the shooting death of rookie police officer Edward Byrne, his parents mourned the loss of their son at his funeral in March.

State review is positive, but Library is concern

by Wayne O'Brien

While the state education department will not release its review of Marist until later this year, the department's concerns have been outlined to the Library, according to Academic Vice President Marc Kilfeather.

Criticism was also made about the size of the Library or a build new one.

If Marian Hall resident Jimmy Kilmer, a freshman from Long Island, N.Y., had seen a page that changed its mind, he would have bought a 15-page book and would not have bought it.

Between LIFE and DEATH

Every year as many as two million teens find themselves caught up in the battle between life and death. High one day, down the next, they play on the slide of eternity — looking for love, acceptance, and sometimes forgiveness.

Denied by many, excoriated by a few, they struggle to survive. What can we do to help?

Soviet journey tests emotions
by Mary Nuske

A feeling of intense anxiety hit me the day before we set out on our journey to the Soviet Union. As a student of Russian and Soviet history, I was extremely eager to visit the country where so much of my past was formed. But as the day of departure drew near, I began to question my decision. Was I really prepared for what I was about to experience? Would I be able to handle the cultural differences and the unknowns of the Soviet Union?

The anxiety was palpable among the students and faculty members of the Marist College group. As we boarded the plane to Moscow, we knew we were embarking on a journey that would test our emotions and challenge our preconceptions.

The group consisted of 36 students and faculty members, and we were accompanied by a Soviet escort. As we flew over the vast expanse of the Soviet Union, we could see the city lights of Moscow below us. The journey was long and draining, but we were all determined to see what the Soviet Union had to offer.

On our first day in Moscow, we visited the Kremlin and the Red Square. The grandeur of the buildings was overwhelming, and the feeling of being in a land so different from our own was palpable. The Soviet escort, led by a guide named Li, greeted us and showed us around the sites.

As we walked through the streets of Moscow, we were struck by the contrast between the modern and the ancient. The Soviet Union had undergone tremendous changes since the collapse of the USSR, and we could see that in the buildings and the people.

The next day, we were taken to a local market, where we were exposed to the sights and sounds of everyday life. The market was bustling with activity, and we were able to see a glimpse of the Soviet lifestyle.

On our third day, we visited the Gorky Park and the Moscow State University. The park was a haven of greenery and tranquility, and the university was a complex of towering buildings.

Throughout our journey, we were met with a mix of curiosity and skepticism by the local people. We were constantly being reminded of the differences between our cultures, and we were challenged to think deeply about our own assumptions and beliefs.

The journey was not without its difficulties. We were confronted with the realities of life in the Soviet Union, and we were forced to confront our own biases and prejudices.

On our last day in Moscow, we were taken to the Pushkin Museum of Fine Arts. The museum was filled with masterpieces of Russian art, and we were awestruck by the beauty and complexity of the works.

The journey to the Soviet Union was a test of our emotions, and it left a lasting impression on all of us. We returned home with a newfound appreciation for the diversity of cultures and the importance of understanding and respecting others.

day on the journey had a profound effect on me. I was so happy to be back in the United States, with my family and friends. I was grateful for the opportunity to have had such an experience.

I have learned so much from this journey, and I am grateful for the opportunity to have had such an experience. I hope that I can continue to learn and grow from the experiences I have had.

Living among Deadheads: A view from the floor
by Wen Zehua

If one was casually posting through the doors of the Marist College dormitories, it would be evident that one had failed to get past the students. "Flower power" and "make love" greeted you at every turn. The Daisy Dorm was in full bloom, with flowers of all kinds blooming everywhere. If one delved inside, one would find a mix of serenity and the usual dormitory chaos.

The dormitories on campus are a microcosm of the world. One finds a diversity of personalities and lifestyles. Some are quiet and studious, while others are loud and boisterous. There is a sense of community here, as students from all over the country come together to share in the experience of college life.

One problem that Joyce finds is that many students are content to live in their dorms for the entire year. She feels that one should experience living on their own.

One could experience living on their own by living on campus, but many students feel that they are not ready for that. Some students are not ready to leave home and deal with the responsibilities of living on their own.

One way to deal with this situation is to get a one-bedroom apartment or a room in a house. This allows students to have some independence, but it also requires them to deal with the responsibilities of living on their own.

The housing shortage on campus is a major problem. Many students are forced to live in dormitories that are too small or too noisy. This can lead to stress and frustration.

The Marist College men's crew had a strong outing and the women's freshman open-eight remained unbeaten last Saturday against Drexel University in Philadelphia, Pa.

The men's varsity heavyweight-four — from how to cow-crawl Ed Flood, Paul Dottinger, Marty Kennedy, Jay Murray and Maureen Casey — won by an impressive 23.8-second margin.

In the lightweight-eight race, Marist's varsity crew took first while the junior varsity finished second. The varsity lightweight-eight also beat Drexel's heavyweight-eight in another race.

But Marist can't rest on its laurels this week. On Saturday they face their biggest test yet against Ithaca College.

"It's one of our fastest crews which should give Marist a winning edge," said Davis. "We're not very strong teams. But the rest of them I just don't know."

"We've had a lot of injuries, sickness and attrition. They have less experience than the men," he said.
