Students who rely on financial aid to attend college could be required to perform community service or join the military if a new plan becomes law.

Under the plan, backed by Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., students would earn money for school by completing a service program. Current federal grants and scholarships would be eliminated.

Loans would still be available, but only to students who meet their service obligations.

Students would have three options for earning a dollar:
- Individuals completing two years of active military duty and committing to six years in the reserves would receive $24,000, to be used for college, job training or a down payment on a home.
- Individuals committing to eight years of military reserve service would receive $12,000.
- Individuals who perform at least one year of community service would receive $10,000 for each year of service and a wage of $100 a week.

Students say the answer is simple. They oppose the plan for several reasons.

- The system is better.
- They think it is too limiting to force students into a service requirement.
- They believe it is unfair, particularly for middle-class and wealthy students who could afford to pay for college without doing military or community service.

But lawmakers and college officials agree there will be some type of national service program.

"Ideas about national service have been around for at least two decades," Charles B. Norkeliunas Jr., senior vice president of the American Council on Education, recently told the Chronicle of Higher Education. "But there are so many bills being introduced now by such a diverse student body that has been involved with "deskstop" recruitment and other methods of "desktop" recruiting..."
Student renters lash out at city and college

By Debra Yank

In the wake of the passage of a new student renting law in Poughkeepsie, many Marist students are upset by the increase in housing problems on campus. The law, which goes into effect in July, and ends Aug. 11, total cost for the new law is $300,000. Guests should contact Dr. Arthur Reilly, at (212) 760-7706, or the Marist College Department of Public Safety, at (845) 758-7700.

Job hunters find helping hand

by John Callahan

Students feeling the pinch of federal financial aid cuts can find a helping hand at the Job Location and Development Center, according to Nancy Constantino, an assistant director of the center.

Students who apply for jobs through the center will be able to receive two free $99 travel vouchers in the mail.

Some students, say the area's College Television Station, have a credit history, it must be unblemished. Undergraduates make up the majority of students who apply for jobs through the center.

As a student Cardmember you will be able to enjoy national benefits and personal service you would expect from American Express.

On Northwest Airlines, you can enjoy freundliche service and comfortable seating, thanks to Chris Walsh.

This is all you need to apply for the Card.

Women dominate swim championships

Women's swimming and diving team, which began this season without a coach, made an amazing turnaround this past true this past weekend by winning the Metropolitan Conference Eastern Division championships at SUNY Stony Brook. Although they were 200-70 in dual-meet competition just 8-4 in dual-meet competition the Lady Red Foxes dominated the championships, winning 13 events and garnering four special awards. Diver Lisa Burgbacher also set two conference records.

"It all paid off," said coach Rena Patier

"It was exciting. I was thrilled to death by being named Coach of the Year," said Patier.

"I was very surprised. Kinda Predmore dominated by winning three individual events and being named Coach of the Year," said coach Larry Van Wagner. "I was excited.

Menapace — good coach who wants more

So much talent in the area and we need

"I'm a positive person," he said. "It's my goal to ultimately be the head coach at Marist College — at some point I would like to coach the players who know full well what it's like to deal with adversity.

"We started from scratch," said Menapace. "We built up the program starting at 0-and-20, to the point where we are one of the best Class D schools in this part of the state. I enjoy the challenge of working at Rhinecliff, but I'm more comfortable at the college level.

"I'm a positive person," he said. "I was a basketball player for many years before becoming a basketball coach. I have a lot of nice things about Rick."
