Old hot wax topples into the dark grave of digital

We live in an age when technology is constantly evolving, and the music we enjoy is no exception. Music lovers no matter what the age have enjoyed music in different forms throughout the years. From the rise of vinyl records, to the advent of CDs, to the modern era of streaming music, change is the constant. As technology advances, so too must we adapt to new formats, or at least learn to appreciate the old ways.

The rise of vinyl records

Vinyl records, or LPs, have enjoyed a resurgence in recent years. Once thought of as a relic of the past, the vinyl record has once again become a popular format for music lovers. The first vinyl records were introduced in the late 1940s and early 1950s, but it wasn’t until the late 1960s and early 1970s that they became the dominant format for recordings. The popularity of vinyl records continued through the 1980s and early 1990s, but then began to decline as CDs became more popular. However, in recent years, there has been a resurgence in interest in vinyl records, as more and more people are discovering the unique qualities of this format.

The rise of CDs

The compact disc, or CD, was introduced in the mid-1980s and quickly became the dominant format for music recordings. CDs offered the advantage of being able to store more music on one disc than a vinyl record, and they were also more resistant to scratches and other damage. However, CDs have their limitations. They can only store so much music on one disc, and they don’t have the same aesthetic appeal as vinyl records.

The rise of streaming music

Streaming music has become the dominant format for music consumption in recent years. With services like Spotify and Apple Music, listeners can access a vast library of songs and albums from anywhere in the world. Streaming music is convenient and provides access to a wide range of music, but it does have its drawbacks. Many musicians and record labels are concerned that streaming services do not pay enough royalties to artists.

The future of music

As technology continues to evolve, it’s likely that we will see new formats and changes in the way we consume music. It’s important to remember that each format has its own unique qualities and advantages. Whether you prefer vinyl records, CDs, or streaming music, it’s important to support the artists and musicians who create the music you love.

Seniors scramble for an edge in the job hunt

Polish up your resume: Job expo to be on campus

Mike O’Farrell

Preparing your resume is an important step in the job search process. A well-crafted resume can help you stand out from other job applicants and increase your chances of landing an interview. It’s important to tailor your resume to the specific job you are applying for, highlighting the skills and experiences that are relevant to the position.

In addition to your resume, preparing a cover letter is also important. It’s a chance to communicate your enthusiasm and fit for the job. Make sure to address the letter to the specific person you are applying to and use their name if possible.

Networking is key in the job search process. Reach out to friends, family, and former colleagues to see if they know of any job openings or can introduce you to potential employers.

Lastly, be persistent and patient. The job search can be a long process, but staying positive and never giving up is key to success.

Sepp said most of the offers that come early go to seniors. Some students may be able to get the job offer before they graduate, but others may have to wait until after graduation to see if they were accepted.

Sometimes it can take up to three months for a job offer to come in. Sometimes, it happens right away. It’s a tough process.

The warped logic of music popularity polls

Let's face it. "Stabbing in the Dark," Prince's new, Grammy Award-winning song is a hit. It doesn't get much more simple than that. The record company decided it would be a hit, and it was. The song is catchy, the lyrics are inspiring, and the video is visually stimulating. It's a perfect example of how the music industry can manipulate our perceptions of what is popular.

But there is more to music than just popularity. What about the quality of the music itself? Is it just a matter of what sells the most copies? Or is there more to it than that?

Some people argue that the music industry is simply a business. They say that the goal is to make money, and that the songs that sell the most copies are the ones that are the most popular. Others argue that there is more to music than just popularity. They say that the music industry should be about more than just making money. They say that the music industry should be about creating art, and that the songs that are the most musically appealing should be the ones that are the most popular.

But the music industry is a complex system, and it is difficult to say for certain what the goals of the industry are. It is clear, however, that the music industry is not simply about popularity, but also about quality.

So let's face it. "Stabbing in the Dark" is a hit, and it deserves to be. But let's not forget the importance of quality in music, and let's not let popularity alone dictate what is considered to be good music.

Probation can rescue failing students

by CHRIS SHEA
Staff Writer

The words “academic probation” may strike fear in the hearts of most students, but in terms of academics it’s a necessary service, according to Rosemary Molloy, director of Student Academic Affairs.

Most students at Marist do not have an accurate perception of what academic probation is, Molloy said.

“It is not a punishment,” she said.

“Academic probation is a service offered by the Office of Student Academic Affairs. It is in the best interests of the students for them to realize that they need to put some extra time into their studies,” said Molloy.

Three faculty members form the committee that determines, on an individual basis, what guidance is needed for a student. The committee is set up on a rotating basis so that one faculty member a year is dropped from the committee, and a new one is added. Members of the committee include the director of the Student Academic Affairs.

Most students do not have an accurate perception of what academic probation is, Molloy said.

“It is not a punishment,” she said.

“Academic probation is a service offered by the Office of Student Academic Affairs. It is in the best interests of the students for them to realize that they need to put some extra time into their studies,” said Molloy.

A third option the committee has, when reviewing a student, is dismissal.

Molloy stressed that while dismissal is usually a last resort, Marist must try to keep up its academic standards.

“If a student is not making satisfactory progress towards graduation, and it doesn’t seem as though the student is fully committed to improvement, then dismissal is an option,” said Molloy.

A student who is dismissed is not eligible to return until the end of the following semester. During this time, the student must work at another college, and demonstrate to the committee that he is willing to work towards academic improvement.

“The main thing I want to convey is academic probation, and the Office of Student Academic Affairs is means of helping. There aren’t any set standards. The committee takes each case and evaluates it individually,” said Molloy.
Icemen gearing up for big final weekend

The Marist hockey team closed out its regular season this weekend with two games in which the Red Foxes compiled a total of 14 unanswered goals.

Marist hosted Montclair State University Friday night in the Mid-Hudson Civic Center, marking the Red Foxes' final home game of the season. With Marist leading 6-1 at the end of the third period, the visiting Mounties scored four times in the final four minutes of the game.

Then on Saturday, the Red Foxes defeated Wagner College 7-4 in the last regular season game of the season. The Marists scored three unanswered goals in the third.

"We had a letdown in the third period," said Marist Coach Rocco Magarity. "We had a chance to win it and we let them back into the game in the third."

What a way to go.

After a season that no one expected the basketball team to have, the Red Foxes fell to sixth-place Wagner in the quartefinal game of the NEC tournament. Despite many people's doubts, the Marist Red Foxes have set records, and have made a name for itself as the only team which can unseat the Long Island University on the court.

One of the main reasons most people did not expect the team to go as far as it did was because of their lack of experience. The team won 20 games and lost only 10. They have some of the best players in the conference, and have been able to put together a great season.

Just last week, the Marist Red Foxes clinched second place in the NEC conference. They have been able to do this by winning five out of five swim relays, and breaking a school record in the 400-meter individual medley. Their season started off strong with a win over Iona College by 200 points, and they continued to win all their games.

The Marist Red Foxes have been able to do this by setting new conference records in four of them. They have also set new school records in a total of 14 races.

What's next?

The Marist Red Foxes will be heading to the NCAA tournament, and will be hoping to bring home a championship. They have set records and have made a name for themselves, and will be hoping to continue their success in the upcoming tournament.
