Employment rate at 89% for ’90 grads
by J.W. STEWART
Senior Editor

Eighty-nine percent of Marist’s Class of 1990 have succeeded in finding a job, according to the 1990 Outcomes Report released by the Career Development and Field Experience Office.

The animal report, compiled through surveys and telephone interviews from October 1990 to September 1991, shows that 41 percent of the 90 percent with jobs were working in a field related to their major. Twenty-three percent of those employed said their work was somewhat related to their major.

Seventy percent of the graduates with jobs are working in a field unrelated to their undergraduate major, the report said.

The report also states 12 percent of the Class of 1990 went on to graduate school, six percent remain unemployed.

Sepp said she is pleased with the recent findings.

“I’m happy, sure I am,” she said. “I’ve told some more students who told me that they were working and the college is too small. Everyone involved has to be responsible for their own future.”

Sepp said she plans to visit the recent graduates soon.

“The economy is going to affect Marist’s Class of 1990 especially, because they are the closest to the 1990 numbers.”

Tina said 1990s of the Class of 1990, who went out the workforce, would have none or a little. Thirty percent are not between 1990 and 1991.

Sepp said the Class of 1990 should be more comfortable in the labor market which began to affect Marist graduates in 1990.

“The economy is going to affect all graduating students, not Marist students,” she pointed out.

“Three to six months waiting for a job is now six to nine months waiting. We’re going to see a change in students working outside their majors.”

Students who end up working outside their major are often unhappy and the Career Development and Field Experience Office has statistics to illustrate that.

Of the 25 percent of the Class of 1990 who ended up working outside their major, eight percent said they were happy while 17 percent said they were looking for a change — a two-to-one ratio.

Preliminary information on the Class of 1991 is currently being gathered by the Career Development and Field Experience Office.

Sepp said her office should have more complete information on the whereabouts of last year’s seniors by early spring.

The information her office does have shows students employed by such organizations as NBC, the U.S. Army, the Town of Hyde Park, IBM, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services and Marist College.

Students that chose to attend graduate school have stayed as close as Marist and SUNY New Paltz or have traveled as far as Georgetown University and Indiana University.

In order to avoid the problems encountered by some members of the Class of 1990, Sepp suggests that students pending graduation contact the college in writing.

“Fifteen percent of the Class of 1990 in writing. This course is not in the students’ interest to change in writing. Students are advised to work in job search-related activities, they’re not helping themselves,” said the third-year director.

Brokaw declines Search continues for graduation speaker

by MEGAN MCDONNELL

While Marist seniors search for the ultimate vacation spot for spring break, the college will continue its search for what many students see as a key component of the graduation ceremony — a commencement speaker.

The college has already made at least one contact, according to Shaikeon Koepke, vice president for College Advancement.

“I have received an answer, and we’re moving ahead,” said Kopec. That answer came from Tom Brokaw, NBC news correspondent, whose daughter’s college graduation falls on May 16, the same day as Marist’s, according to Maureen Toner, vice president for the senior class.

“The commencement committee said we’d have a good chance with Brokaw because Marist had a close relationship with the college. Brokaw attended the Lowell Thomas award ceremony sponsored by Marist last June in New York.”

Alex Haley, author of “Roots,” also under consideration for this year’s commencement speaker and honorary-degree recipient, died of a heart attack at age 63 on Feb. 17.

However, Kopec said that as of Monday, the college had not contacted Haley, who delivered a speech and held a round-table discussion with students and faculty in the Campus Center last spring.

According to Kopec, one of the most important factors in the annual search for a commencement speaker is looking for someone who is familiar with Marist and has a connection to the college.

However, the credibility of the individual is foremost, she added.

"He or she must have exemplified some dimension of the college’s mission, whether it be the area of academic excellence, service to others or commitment to higher human values," said Kopec.

She added that the search may be more difficult if that person was prominent, that is not the sole criteria in deciding on a speaker.

“We have to be looking for someone who merit an honorary degree, which is the highest honor given by the college,” said Kopec.

Senior Class President Jennifer Chandler, in conjunction with members of the senior class, compiled the list of potential speakers the class wanted, and brought it to the commencement committee last fall.

The committee, composed of Chandler, Donna Berger, executive assistant to the vice president of academic affairs, Ed O’Keefe, professor of psychology, and Deborah D’Caprio, assistant dean for student services and programs, then narrowed the list down to about three or four realistic names, and brought it to the college.

However, the college did not send a letter to the first candidate until January, said Chandler.

According to Kopec, the search process is continuing.

“This is not an overnight term process. Perhaps it’s better when the notice is shorter, but it is often difficult for someone to know his or her schedule so far ahead,” she said.

Kopec also said the college will look into the academic year may decrease the chances that a speaker will cancel the commitment.

According to Chandler, the committee will hold another in the fall, but the momentum usually doesn’t begin until spring.

Marist officials spark awareness on fire prevention

by CHRISTINA UNGOLA

Everyone on campus must be responsible for maintaining a safe environment. This includes following the procedures of leaving no electrical equipment running, not leaving rooms unattended, and not tampering with fire equipment. Many students do not think about fire safety until they are faced with the reality of an actual fire, as demonstrated in Ms. Nagler's Russian class in the spring semester in Russia. The students were moved to find shelter in the middle of a street in the middle of a square, surrounded by officers that were throwing rocks at them.

The students were very scared, and many had to leave their books and belongings behind.

Nagler said the Americans do not know the danger of foreign countries.

"They think they can go anywhere and be safe. They don't realize that there are dangers in these places," Nagler said. "They need to be more aware of their surroundings and know how to react in an emergency."
Don’t just vote for change, be a part of it

By MARK MARBLE

In honor of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. anniversary, and because there really isn’t much need to write about this or any other topic, I will instead focus on what some might call “constructive criticism.” Most of us have probably been exposed to what people usually call “constructive criticism” but you probably don’t realize that in most cases people don’t even want to hear it.

Student praises efforts

Marist has many different organizations and groups that are responsible for a diverse number of activities on campus. Students take time out to vote. A good way to love your campus is to vote.

priority for new registration process outlined

The campus-wide student referendum, which if ratified by two-thirds of those voting, would create a new student government with new constitution.

Although its affects are seen in the masses, it is the freedom to leave. We should be treated in any inhumane manner, one should be punished for the negative image of prisoners? We can’t keep them in grey walls and iron bars, not HBO.

By doing nothing, we are just as responsible as anyone who is running for office because ingrained in their consciousness should be that those students here at the college.

Students who at least put some of their time to protect and look after their fellow students if they somehow cause a problem. Further­more, one should be punished for the negative image of prisoners? We can’t keep them in grey walls and iron bars, not HBO.

Mrs. Babineau adjusts to hoop life

by JUW. STEWART
Staff Writer

While her husband upstairs is stirring up the McCallum Center, Melanie Babineau is loading up the Red Foxes' laundry basket.

"It's a psychological preparation before a game," she said.

But before that, there's the laundry that must be done. And doing the laundry is not the only thing that Babineau has to do in preparation for her husband's games.

"We have a laundry basket that's full of line-up sheets," she said. "We have to make sure that we're prepared."

And Babineau is always prepared. She's been in the season's ups and downs, and she knows how to handle the stress.

"I try to stay calm," she said. "I try to stay positive."

And she does. Babineau has a positive attitude, and she's always ready for whatever comes her way.

"I'm always prepared," she said. "I'm always ready for the unexpected."

And she is. Babineau is always ready, and she's always prepared.

"I'm always ready," she said. "I'm always prepared for anything."

Women's basketball tops in GPA study

The women's basketball team is above the 500 mark in the Northeast Conference for the first time this season thanks to a sweep on a grueling Pennsylvania road trip.

The Red Foxes pushed their NEC record to 3-4 with victories over St. Francis (Pa.) last Thursday and Thursday. Their overall mark stands at 6-13.

Senior forward Judy Goldman, who was Tyson's legal guardian, said for the next time they were not allowed to be together.

What lies ahead for Tyson is anyone's guess. One thing is certain, the social services agency to which he is now under the care of the state, will continue to monitor him closely.

Tyrone's situation is not unique. There have been recent stories of other young people who were taken away from their homes and placed in institutions.

Tyrone's case has drawn national attention because of his age and the public's interest in young people's rights.

Tyrone is one of many children who have been taken away from their families and placed in institutions for various reasons, including neglect, abuse, and abandonment.

The case has raised questions about the rights of young people and the role of the state in their lives.

Tyrone's story is a reminder of the importance of protecting children's rights and ensuring they are provided with safe and loving environments.

The future for Tyrone is uncertain, but his case has sparked a national conversation about the rights of young people and the need for better policies and practices to protect them.
