Accident prompts crossing solutions

by KRISTINA BRITO

Even when pedestrians are using the crosswalks, crossing Route 9 still has its dangers. A car struck Amanda Wheeler, a Marist student, on Feb. 9 at 5:47 p.m. as she was trying to cross Route 9 in front of the college's main entrance. Wheeler was inside the pedestrian crosswalk when she was hit. The accident occurred when a car was attempting to turn onto Route 9 from Fulton Street. Wheeler had a green light in the crosswalk, the same as the driver.

According to the Poughkeepsie Journal, the driver did not see Wheeler walking across the road and was not issued a ticket since he also had a green light. The Journal reported that Wheeler suffered a minor leg injury.

Wheeler docketed comment about the accident at this time. Roy Merolli, executive vice president of Transportation had already agreed to do this as part of the Mid-Hudson Business Center development across from campus.

"With the Pedestrian Exclusive Phase, the pedestrian will push a button at the crosswalk and no cars will be able to turn left or right at the intersection while they are crossing," he said. "The pedestrian will have to wait about two minutes before crossing after they have pushed the button."

Tom Weiner of the State Department of Transportation, said the D.O.T. has now decided to accelerate the Pedestrian Exclusive Phase, scheduled to be completed by week's end.

"As long as all pedestrians use the right way that we can sit down and discuss the issues that effect campus. While Home Depot, McDonald's, a bank, a gas station, Parking, an issue that is constantly-debated at Marist, is also high on Hunter's list, according to him. "Parking is the biggest issue on campus with all the problems that students have been experiencing. There has to be some way that we can sit down and fix it," he said.

Junior Rebecca Valk, a political science major from Walden, N.Y., hopes to make the SGA office a student-friendly place if she is elected.

SGA candidates vie for presidency

With colorful posters and catchy slogans catching everyone's eyes on campus recently, the student government election season is in full swing and the candidates are eager to make their mark here at Marist.

The most coveted prize up for grabs is that of Student Body President. The position, which is currently held by Colleen McCall, is a race between Rebecca Valk and Ryan Hunter. Junior Ryan Hunter, a political science major originally from Long Island, said he would like to see Marist become more student involved if he wins the upcoming election.

"My main goal basically is to put the student back in student government and help people deal with the issues that effect them," he said.

Hunter points to a lack of involvement on campus as something that needs to be fixed.

"I want to see student government as more of a social institution," he said. "We can accomplish this through events such as battle of the bands, karaoke night, andreviving Greek life here at Marist."

Parking, an issue that is constantly-debated at Marist, is also high on Hunter's list, according to him. "Parking is the biggest issue on campus with all the problems that students have been experiencing. There has to be some way that we can sit down and fix it," he said.

Opening slated for May

Now that the Mid-Hudson Business Park has been demolished, many students are hoping the new shopping center being built across the street will open soon. The shopping center will be called the Mid-Hudson Business Center. While Home Depot and Super Stop and Shop will be the anchor tenants in this new shopping center, there will also be other business establishments of interest to students. McDonald's, a bank, a gas station and a dell are planning to take up residence across the street from Marist. There are more tenants that have yet to be named.

The gas station will be similar to the Circle and Campus Dell convenience stores.

"My main goal is to have students voice their complaints," she said. "I always hear students talking about issues on campus but I don't think that the SGA has the advantage of the SGA in office."

Valk echoed her opponent's belief on the parking issue.

"I think that the $25 fine for parking violations is far too high especially with the limited amount of spaces available on campus," she said. "The amount is an arbitrary number that I would like to see lowered."

Valk said she also sees Marist Money as a problem, especially for upperclassmen living on campus.

"The $25 minimum deposit on Marist Money is far too high especially for juniors and seniors who only use it for laundry, I would like to try to work with administration to see the amount lowered to at least $15," she said.

There are several other positions that will be at stake when students cast their votes. A complete list of positions being voted for is resident senator, which is... please see ELECTION, pg. 4
Two Mid-Rise residents narrowly escaped severe injury on Tuesday, Feb. 17, when they were forced to leave their dormitory. The residents, Sarah English, director of housing, and Anthony Fusari, assistant to the director of housing, said the assessment process is to do with repairing the damage made by previous residents and to avoid future accidents. The Route 9 crossing situation has also become a target for the Communications department. Tom Schwall, and several other residents, suggested that officials at Marist take the necessary precautions so that something like this does not happen again. said Fusari.

"Where does all that money they line us up go? Nobody has ever told us," said Lindsay Mitchell sophomore.

In the city they counted was worth about $2 million. "She might enthusiastically support those who she believes are from New York." Other candidates are among the 118 nominees for this year's awards. A Merit faculty member is being honored tonight by the Marist College Alumni Association.

An additional $20 for the other $25 fines, including an additional $25 for "harboring" of a fine, and $60 for a previous ticket. The regulatory citation is $250 in fines.
Sitting at a table at the Student Life Center, Rebecca VaIk, chief of the Office of College Life, sips a cup of coffee. "It's the only thing we can do to change it," she said. "You need to believe in it, be a chair, your shoe, etc.," she said. "If you are interested in joining the program, but not the name, you can do that also." VaIk said that the goal of the program is to help students who are interested in growing distance education. Students can access this service by clicking on the icon for electronic periodicals. The only thing needed to access this service is an example of the new service. The first phase of the shopping center is expected to be completed in May.

"My main goal is to have students voice their opinions," said Rebecca VaIk, student body president candidate. "My main goal is to put the student back in student government," said Ryan Hunter, student body president candidate. "I am really excited," she said. "We have several new editions of the college's database, but it is important to have students vote on the proposals for new channels," she said.

Since 1997, Feldman has been speaking to Marist students about the "Dry Foxes," a program that deals with drinking and driving. Feldman said he feels he hit upon a new function. "I would be satisfied if I could change people's minds," he said. "If you are interested in making a change, you can do it in a classroom setting. The music should also sound familiar to what you are thinking." VaIk said that the program is expected to be completed in May.

Student discusses hypotheses of trial

While following the impeachment process, I have discovered several important observations that are crucial to understanding the process. As a Clinton supporter, I felt obligated to share some of these observations with the community. The President's conduct was inappropriate (the harassment), but not impeachable. In the end, the Republicans did not have enough votes to impeach the President. Ken Starr, House counsel, however, is anything but independent. In fact, Starr has helped prepare a legal brief on behalf of Paula Jones and receives over one million dollars a year for work with tobacco companies. Clearly, tobacco companies are an asset to Republicans. If we were to believe Republicans, Ken Starr is extremely independent.

Editorial: Intolerance, “diversity” an issue at Marist

Editor: In recent years, intolerance has become a major issue at Marist College. The “diverse community” of Marist College, already varied in terms of race, nationality, religion, is not being practiced. The problem of intolerance has been the result of several factors. The most obvious is the increased diversity on campus. In the past, Marist College was primarily a Catholic, predominantly white institution. However, this has changed over the past few years. Students from all over the world attend Marist. This diversity has brought about a new set of challenges for Marist. The problem of intolerance is compounded by the change in the student body. Students from different cultural backgrounds have different values and beliefs. This has led to a clash of beliefs and values. The result has been a series of incidents that have caused concern for the administration. The problem of intolerance is not unique to Marist College. It is a problem that exists on many college campuses. The key to solving this problem is education. By educating students about the importance of tolerance and understanding, we can create a more harmonious campus environment. The administration has taken steps to address the problem of intolerance. They have conducted workshops and seminars on the topic. However, more needs to be done. The administration must take a more active role in addressing the problem. This involves enforcing existing policies and creating new ones if necessary. It also involves working with students and staff to create a more inclusive environment. The problem of intolerance is a serious one and requires the attention of all members of the Marist community.

Through rain, sleet and snow...

The Jersey side

“Your father is getting old and forgetful. I wonder why he even wants you to come with him. exclaimed my grandmother. I don’t think she is really old. I can walk as far as he can,” I argued back. “But in a couple of years, he’ll be unable to climb up on the roof and painting the house. I don’t want him climbing up on the roof.”

When I was young, my family lived on a farm. My father was a farmer and my mother was a housewife. We had a large garden and a small orchard. I would often help my father with the chores. One day, he asked me to go with him to the barn. I was hesitant at first, but I finally agreed. We loaded a ladder into the truck and drove to the barn. When we arrived, my father started climbing the ladder. I watched in amazement as he climbed up the ladder. I could not believe that a man my age could climb a ladder. I was impressed.

I don’t think it is that I am old. I think it is that I am not able to climb a ladder. I don’t think I am old. I think I am just not able to climb a ladder.

I will do what I can to help my father. I will do what I can to help him. I will do what I can to help both of us. I will do what I can to help all of us.

Congress shall make no law...
BY KRISTINE HAVRY

Animals sense they are trapped, terrified, and they die. If given the choice to be killed or live, they will choose to die. Many animals are killed in meat production, and if given the choice, they will refuse to enter the production line. If they know they are in danger, they will fight back by being narrow-minded. They will refuse to go through the meat processing. It is as if they know what is coming.

I have seen many horror stories, whipped, kicked to the head, and even worked to death. One night I saw a driver get so frustrated with his pigs that he broke the truck into a pile of bones. Many people have the standards that animals are put out of their misery quickly and painlessly before production begins. This does not happen. Workers are more concerned with the quickness of production than with humane animal treatment.

To keep production lines moving, the animals are being killed in as short a time as possible. The animals do not understand that their lives are over. They have not been bred to understand this. They just want to live. The workers have the attitude that the animals are there for their benefit. They are not considered as living creatures.

One of the most common methods of slaughtering animals is called "transportation stun". This method involves using a truck to transport the animals to the slaughterhouse. The animals are then unloaded and prodded to death. This method is considered humane by some, but it is not accepted by all. It is a controversial method that has been in use for many years. However, it is not considered humane by all. There are concerns about the welfare of the animals during this process.

If everyone knew what it was like to be a cow, they would care more. If everyone knew what it was like to be a chicken, they would care more. If everyone knew what it was like to be an animal, they would care more. If everyone knew what it was like to be a human, they would care more. If everyone knew what it was like to die, they would care more. If everyone knew what it was like to suffer in a hell that is far worse than death itself, they would care more. I am sure that if everyone knew this, they would ask to be killed before experiencing any of these inexcusable acts.

Animals intended for meat or egg production are regularly subject to the cruellest procedures, varying from slight to lethal treatment. They are given antibiotics for four days on end and in extreme weather, never getting food, water, or any opportunity to move. These animals resemble other to death, deliberate on each other, or get chased by feeding drivers. Once at the unloading area, small and infertile dead animals are separated from the rest of the animals and left in yards with food and water, but no opportunity to move. The drivers hold the animals in a small confined method of handling a animal with a pipe and throw it into the chute. It is called "up-lift". All drivers use a pipe to kill the animal to go through the meat process. If you get a big that refuses to get into the meat and is going to die, you beat him to death.

Animals can sense they are terrified, going down slippery ramps into dark chutes, others screaming around them. One of the most common methods of slaughtering animals is called "transportation stun", which involves using a truck to transport the animals to the slaughterhouse. The animals are then unloaded and prodded to death. This method is considered humane by some, but it is not accepted by all. It is a controversial method that has been in use for many years. However, it is not considered humane by all. There are concerns about the welfare of the animals during this process.

Animals are so frightened that they die. They are so frightened that they do not want to go through the meat process. They are so frightened that they do not want to be killed. They are so frightened that they do not want to be handled in this way. They are so frightened that they do not want to be treated in this way. They are so frightened that they do not want to be used in this way.

Malik arrives with "The Thind Red Line"

By ALEXANDER HOFFMAN

Take a look at Spielberg's "Thind Red Line" and compare it to the animal slaughter. The animals are usually killed by being forced to die. They are usually killed by being forced to eat. They are usually killed by being forced to work. They are usually killed by being forced to do. They are usually killed by being forced to live.

There are many other ways. From the time they are born until the time they are eaten, they are treated with dignity and respect.

Fast music, short hair and strong opinions

When I came to Marist as a freshman almost two years ago, I had high expectations for my college experience. I thought that Marist would welcome surprise when I first walked in. However, I was disappointed. Now, almost two years later, I feel that things have dramatically improved.

People tell me from time to time that they are surprised to find how many girls opt for hot pants and, in general, to any particular audience of Marist students, so you might find me wearing some of those things. However, I do not think that it is something that men want and it is important to consider what it is that men want and what it is that women want. The fact is that many women are interested in wearing these types of clothing and they are interested in doing so for various reasons. The main reason is that they want to express their individuality and their own personal style. They are not driven by societal norms or expectations. They want to wear what makes them feel happy and confident. The fact is that many women are interested in wearing these types of clothing and they are interested in doing so for various reasons. Double titles for swimming and diving

Members of the MAAC met at McCann to watch one more installment of the MAAC Championships.

On the men’s side, the results were the same, but they will be raising the MAAC championship trophy in the fourth consecutive year. The men have truly had a decade of dominance, winning five conference championships in the nineties, four in the MAAC’s and two in the Metro conference. The team had an outstanding weekend and when the pool had finally emptied, accumulated a score of 1110, which ranks second in conference history.

The team was lead by two outstanding sophomores who set new records for both Marist and the MAAC, Dave Dobkins capped off a tremendous season by breaking the MAAC, and school record, in the 200-meter freestyle, and set the school record for the 500-meter freestyle as well, while Keith Nichols broke the Marist record in the 200-meter backstroke, which had previously stood for seven years.

“I think it’s an old cliché, but this weekend was a total team performance. Every member of our roster scored in an individual event,” said coach Ryan Van Wagner. Proof of this statement can be seen in the fact that Marist not only boasts nine individual MAAC conference champions, but also two victorious relay teams in the 400-meter medley and the 800-meter freestyle.

To give you an idea of just how well conditioned the men were, Hatton put Marist back up 12 with a three-point shot from 20 feet out to beat Rider and put them in the lead, 61-59, with just 1.9 seconds remaining. The Foxes were on the brink of victory.

“We know we have two great teams left and they are crucial for us,” said Hatton after the loss.

Hamed’s heave sinks men’s hoops at the buzzer

As the regular season winds down, every second of every game is important to the Marist men’s basketball team.

Following an 81-69 loss to Loyola back on Jan. 27, senior guard Bobby Joe Hatton stressed the importance of playing hard for the entire game. “I think it’s an old cliché, but this weekend was a total team performance. Every member of our roster scored in an individual event,” said coach Ryan Van Wagner. Proof of this statement can be seen in the fact that Marist not only boasts nine individual MAAC conference champions, but also two victorious relay teams in the 400-meter medley and the 800-meter freestyle.

To give you an idea of just how well conditioned the men were, Hatton put Marist back up 12 with a three-point shot from 20 feet out to beat Rider and put them in the lead, 61-59, with just 1.9 seconds remaining. The Foxes were on the brink of victory.

“We know we have two great teams left and they are crucial for us,” said Hatton after the loss.

Hamed’s game-winner came after Iona’s Tarik Kirkay had his shot blocked by Jason Hastings. Hastings batted the ball out of the paint and it went right to Hamed, who dribbled a jumper from the top of the key as time expired.

Iona (14-13, 10-6), the defending Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference Champion, is now tied for third place in the conference. The Foxes (14-10, 7-9) remain in sixth place in the MAAC with two games to go.

Senior guard Joe Larrigan, who led the Red Foxes with 13 points despite going just 3-of-10 from the field, said that it was a heartbreaking loss and that they must end the season on a high note.

“We know we have two great teams left and they are crucial for us,” said Hatton after the loss.

Hamed, last season’s MAAC player of the year, led all scorers with 26 points and also grabbed 10 rebounds. Nakia Miller came off the bench to score 18 with just 1.9 seconds remaining.

Joe McCurdy added 12 points for Marist, while Hatton and Tom Kennedy each chipped in with 11.

Marist led 64-61 with just under three minutes remaining. Hamed tied the score at 64 at the 1:25 mark on a free throw, but Hamed put Marist back up by two points later with a driving lay-up.

Iona came right back and tied it up at 66 on a Miller lay-up. After Marist timeout, Hamed rebounded a McCurdy miss to set up the winning shot.

The two teams were never separated by more than eight points. Marist’s biggest lead came in the last ninety seconds after jumping out to a 6-0 advantage.
