Schedule Discussed

By Suzanne Breese

"We're not trying to enforce anything," said Mr. John Dwyer, campus Registrar. This is one of the many misconceptions people have about the new academic system proposed for next September.

The Saturday, June 17th, when the system was originated to create a time that could be used for a class, when both the student and the professor feel that the three hour lecture isn't enough. A class would meet once a week, instead of three hours a week. The Saturday slot will not be used for required classes. However, 1/8th classes may be offered then also.

Rathskellar May Take On New Image

By Larry Strickart

The Marist College Food Service is proposing to build a pub with a full bar, food and a dance floor in the Rathskellar. The project, which would project cost $25,000.00. if the food service division was asked to build it, the cost would be $15,000.00. If, however, the project would cost $30,000.00. He said the bank would probably be moved to the basement, Hall, but added, "There are a lot of costs involved in the project, there will be a lot of fees, and the cost of moving the book, there."

Luremes said the financial status of the campus bars and the men's and women's basketball teams, the president and the board of trustees, before they are approved. Therefore, no financial data on how we do financially, is made public.

Frosh Overhauled Planned

By Cynthia Farbanks

Part of the academic overhaul being proposed by the Academic Affairs Committee is the elimination of the Freshman 20, O'Keefe, chairman, is writing a skills program developed by the Ad Hoc Committee on Writing Skills. The committee reports that freshmen be required to take three or six credits in English writing courses, according to ability. Evaluation would be based on Scholastic Achievement Test scores. The maximum requirement would be six credits though students with good ability would be exempted from the requirement. However, they would have to take a lower level, English, or literature course. The courses would be selected by the Ad Hoc Committee.

Students needing three credits would have a choice between a composition course, independent study, writing course, or be taken freshman year. The independent study course would be to "open up to about 60 sections, two instructors. Students would need to regularly interact with instructors, and engage in class discussions with their students. The majority of courses would be taught by first-year college students who would be supervised by their seniors.

Deaths Tied To Shots

By Regina Clarkin

With Marist College being a possible distribution center for the swine flu vaccine many students, and especially those living for the first time, may be uncertain about what to expect. According to the Department of Health, 44 cases of swine flu have been reported in the state. Students receiving the vaccine have been advised to look for any signs of illness.

The victims, who had been im- muno-suppressed, had received the vaccine for older people. The virus is highly contagious, and the combination vaccine is not the same as the swine flu and the type A virus.

Foy Talks Tuition

By Kevin Stack

Tuition increase next year? Admissions Director Mr. Stack, a member of the President's Committee on Finance, said the students can be expected to pay more. The cost will be $500.00. in the 1959-1960. budget.

Foy said, "The only way to reduce the costs of the College is to reduce the number of students.

Foy explained that departmental budget cuts would be based on the number of students and the number of credits. The departmental budgets were cut by 5 percent, and the budget was allowed to spend more than 10 percent of its budget on travel.

Foy said, "The only way to reduce the costs of the College is to reduce the number of students."

C.U.B. asks...

Why Won't Students Attend Events?

By Raedan Brown

John Dowling, president of Marist College Union Board (CUB), expressed concern over the attendance of Marist students to CUB activities. Dowling noted that attendance at CUB events had dropped significantly over the past few years. According to Dowling, there are several reasons for this decline in attendance, including lack of interest, lack of promotion, and the perception that events are not relevant to students.

Dowling also mentioned that the recent move of the Union Board to a new location on campus has contributed to the decline in attendance. He stated that the new location is more isolated from the student dormitories and classrooms, making it less convenient for students to attend events.

Dowling concluded by stating that the Union Board is committed to improving attendance at its events and is open to suggestions from students on how to achieve this goal. He encouraged students to participate in CUB events and to give feedback on what they would like to see from the Union Board.

Louis Voerman, second from left, vice president and general manager of IBM - Mid-Hudson Valley Manufacturing, Systems Product Division, recently presented a check for $50,000 to Gary Smith, center, capital campaign chairman, and President Louis R. Fox, second from right. The check is part of a $150,000 IBM grant. Also participating in the presentation were IBM employees Scott Moore, far left, technical assistant in the manager of laboratory services, and George Flanagan, to the right of Gary Smith, manager of Mid-Hudson Education. Mr. Moore served as liaison between the college and IBM Corporation. At far right is Dr. Louis Raccolta, academic dean. Mr. Voerman cited Marist College as “one of the area’s leading educational facilities, as well as being a focal point in the community for cultural and recreational activities.” The grant is the result of a nationwide campaign by the college to raise $100,000 to meet immediate and long-range goals identified by Marist’s Board of Trustees as essential to maintaining and enhancing the quality of academic and student life at Marist.
