7 arrested in incidents on campus
by Chris Landry

Two separate incidents of theft on campus last week resulted in the arrest of four Marist students and three local residents.

Town of Poughkeepsie police Thursday morning arrested Mary Byrnes, Dawn Yannace and Christine Hebrogh of Champagne Hall and Julie Mariotti of the Garland Commons Apartments. They are charged with stealing more than $400 worth of food from the school's cafeteria, according to Joseph Lally, director of safety and security.

The students received a summons to appear in court at a later date for other disciplinary action from the Housing Office, Lally said.

After receiving reports from cafeteria cooks of missing food and a combination kitchen at 4:30 a.m. Security found a car in the Champagne parking lot filled with food, Lally said.

Asimov regales crowd at Marist
by Paul O'Sullivan

While a picture may be worth a thousand words, to Dr. Isaac Asimov, a television show is not worth a thousand books.

The preference of reading over watching television was one of many subjects Asimov addressed to more than 250 people in the Theater last Thursday.

Asimov called television "image plate" and said it made viewers "passive receptacles" while books create "active participants" out of readers.

"I don't believe the book will ever be replaced," he said. "It is the ancient and the ultimate." According to Asimov, television is not necessarily to blame for the lack of reading in America. Asimov said he felt many people would rather sit and stare at nothing than read a book.

"Reading is difficult, watching television isn't," he said. "Not all who can read do so. They don't do it if they can get away with it."

In addition to his feelings about America's lack of reading, Asimov also talked about how advances in computer technology would produce more creative people. He said computers would be used to perform dull and dangerous tasks, leaving people free to pursue their interests.

Asimov also discounted the notion that computers would one day "take over" if allowed to run certain parts of society.

"The future belongs to us and the computer," he said. "It is not a matter of competition but cooperation. Humanity and computers are going to do many wonderful things together."

In a question and answer period after the lecture, Asimov expressed his skepticism about the Strategic Defense Initiative — an anti-missile defense system that would be placed in space to protect the United States.

"More and more I think they're finding that it simply isn't going to work," he said. "It's a fantasy."

Asimov also said he issues such as S.D.I., better known as "Star Wars," made it vital that citizens have a basic understanding of science in order to make wise choices in elections. He said people must know whether or not an expensive project like S.D.I. can work before choosing a candidate who wants to spend billions of dollars on it.

The audience cheered when he replied that if Bush was president he would change his previous stance on a policy and insist on prayer in public schools to pray for the health of the president, so Quayle would never gain power.

Debaters square off as Election Day nears
by Karen Goettler

The issue of whether the president of the United States is above the law was one that could not be agreed upon by Republican and Democratic representatives in a mock presidential debate the Political Science Club sponsored last Wednesday.

The debate had a format similar to the actual presidential debate. The participants were asked by moderator David McCraw, professor of journalism, to make an opening statement addressing the restoration of peace and values in the world.

After the opening statements they responded to questions posed by the panel, which consisted of Mayor,参议员, and f ong, political science major, Dr. H. Balch, professor of history, and Marc Eisenhauer, a junior political science major, represented the Republican side while John White, professor of history, and Michael Buckley, a junior political science major, presented the Democratic viewpoint.

Foreign policy and ethics were the issues being debated. The question of whether a political leader should be above the law was raised by Dr. Jeanne Myers, professor of political science and a member of the four-man committee questioning the debaters.

Balch said it "would depend on the law, but some laws may need to be broken carefully, and he said the sale of arms to Iran was legal.

Buckley replied that the United States broke the law in the sale to Iran, and the president is supposed to be the "head lawmaker, not head lawbreaker."

During the debate Buckley and White declared that the Reagan administration had kept too many facts hidden from the public and that a George Bush administrator was likely to do the same.

Balch said people who believed they knew about everything going on in the political arena had too high an opinion of politicians.

Dr. Louis Zucarelli, professor of political science and another member of the panel, raised the issue of Michael Dukakis' ability to deal with leaders from nations like Great Britain and the Soviet Union. White responded that Dukakis would not have any trouble dealing with them while Eisenhauer said that since Dukakis couldn't count on support from residents in his own state of Massachusetts he wouldn't get support from international leaders.

When Bush raised the question of how Dan Quayle would react to a crisis that gave him the presidential power, Eisenhauer responded that it wouldn't be a problem because Quayle has as much experience in decision-making as Dukakis' running mate, Lloyd Bentsen.

The audience cheered White when he replied that if Bush was president he would change his previous stance on a policy and insist on prayer in public schools to pray for the health of the president, so Quayle would never gain power.

Four local bars hit hard in DWI lawsuit
by Michael Hayes

Four area bars and a drunken driver have been ordered to pay Vassar College professor Mark Schlesman's $4.8 million in what is believed to be one of the largest settlements in New York under the 131-year-old Dram Shop Act.

Schlesman's 33-year-old wife, Dr. Joy Businger, was killed in July of 1994 by Stephen Kane, after a night of bachelor-party bar hopping. In 1985 Kane was sentenced to a year in jail.

The bars attended by Kane include: Bertie's, Skinner's, and River Station of Poughkeepsie as well as Gaffney's Pub in Hyde Park.

The Dram Shop Act allows a lawyer to be held responsible if it is knowingly served alcohol to an intoxicated individual who later injures another person.

Although Kane drank at several bars during the evening, testimony in the case revealed he drank the most at Bertie's. Schlesman is to receive more than $4 million from that establishment, $350,000 from Kane's, $50,000 from Skinner's: $17,500 from Gaffney's and $5,500 from River Station.

According to Schlesman's lawyer, Steve Melley, Bertie's and Thomas office crunch to be alleviated soon by the Martin

"To solve the problem of office crunch, students will soon be leaving our Communications Center," says new student association president. "We've been working on an extra office for some time, but now the second floor office was too small. It would be inadequate for the number of students. So we're finally moving our new space."

The new office will be located on the second floor, and the current space will be converted into a larger office for the students. The new office will be open for business on Monday. Students can expect to see the new office open for business on Tuesday.

The new office will be open to the public from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. on weekdays. Students can also contact the new office at 555-6789.

Tough dorm policy sets off protests at BU

"We're being slammed to kill a fly," says Tim. "We're really upset about this policy."

The policy, which takes effect next week, requires students to report all fly sightings to the residence hall desk. The policy is being met with mixed reactions from students.

Some students, like Tim, are upset about the policy. Others, like Sarah, are not as worried about it.

Tim says, "This is ridiculous. We're being overreacted to a fly."

Sarah says, "I think it's a good idea to report all fly sightings. It's important to keep our dorms clean."
Thomas office crunch to be alleviated soon
by the Martin

To solve the problem of student office space at the Communications Center, four new offices will be opened up for additional faculty before the Martin Hall addition is completed. The second floor office was too small and not big enough for the number of offices that were being contracted for at the time. The new offices will be opened up to be used by the faculty to do more academic research and work on smaller projects. The new offices will provide a more comfortable and efficient work environment for the faculty. The office space is expected to be completed before the end of the semester.

Marist's Media Day

Politics, career advice top agenda at conference
by Anne Citro
The media's effect on the elections and breaking into the communications business were the topics discussed at a panel and more than 100 students at The Radion Television News Directors Association Conference March 7th.

The day-long event, presented by Robert Nuckols, ABC News correspondent and 1977 graduate, received the Marist Alumni Award for Excellence in News Reporting during the luncheon. Nuckols Am ated the students about networks and how to "scoop the story."

Bill O'Reilly, ABC News correspondent and 1977 graduate, moderated the panel discussion, which featured four fellow journalists.

Two other speakers were Tracy Murdock, author of "A Different Stage," and Bob O'Reilly, author of "Women of the Future," who are currently students at St. Louis University.

The event also featured an interview with Marist student Kevin Curran, who is set to graduate in 1989 and will begin an internship with WRTA-TV in Kingston.

The panelists discussed the growth of media and how the election cycle is changing.

"We greatly exaggerate the importance of the media to the individual," said Hal Martin, ABC News correspondent.

The medias efficiency has improved over the years, and the public is becoming more aware of the "power of the media," he said.

The public has not yet reached the end of the "network age," he said.

The panelists were Assets to the audience as another speaker, said, "Most people would rather call one person on the phone and have the conversation not involving politics,"

"But we're the only ones who can call the public on the phone."

O'Reilly said people who do vote base their decisions on emotional lines.

Art Andrus, managing editor of WCSS New York City, discussed his work as a producer in television news.

"People like to see the real people, but they also want to see the people," he said.

Dr. Lee Metzloff, director of the Marist Institute for Public Opinion, cautioned against the use of media outlets to promote their own products.

The event was organized by the Marist Alumni Association, and was sponsored by the Office of Public Information.

Politics, career advice top agenda at conference

Jack Sheehan (right), president of the Marist Alumni Association, and Anne Citro, news director of WCSS, a local station and former Marist student, co-hosted the event.

The event was open to all Marist students and faculty, and was held in the Student Center.

The event was made possible by the generous support of WCSS and the Marist Alumni Association.

The event was also covered by the Marist University News Service, and was broadcast on WCSS.

Time to nix Library noise

What's the busiest place on-campus during mid-term week? You guessed it -- the Library! What's the least crowded place on-campus during mid-term week? Right again -- the Library! With the increased amount of noise in the Library, there are those who need a quiet place to get away from the commotion and study. In the past, the students who were studied in the Library were those who needed a place to get away from the commotion and study. As a result, the Library was not a popular place to study. Now, we have something else to complete. Unfortunately, there is little that the administration can do to alleviate this problem.

The movement in the Library was made in an effort to give students more room to use for their studies. Now that we have the added room, we need the atmosphere to use it.

Another advantage of the Library is the fact that the Library is a quiet place to study. As a result, the Library is a place where students can focus on their studies and get the work done.

Perhaps an old adage can be modified to describe the reader who resides in the Library -- even students should not be heard.

About that Bush ballot...

Paul O'Halloran

This is the ballot that money can't buy.

It's true that the Bush campaign has spent millions of dollars on advertising, but it's not true that the Bush campaign has spent all of its money on advertising. The Bush campaign has spent a significant amount of money on research, polling, and other activities.

The Bush campaign has also spent a significant amount of money on advertising. However, the Bush campaign's advertising has been more targeted than the Gore campaign's advertising.

Early in the campaign, the Bush campaign concentrated on advertising in areas where the Bush campaign believed it could win. The Bush campaign also concentrated on advertising in areas where it believed it could win.

In contrast, the Gore campaign concentrated on advertising in areas where it believed it could win. The Gore campaign also concentrated on advertising in areas where it believed it could win.

New album signals 'comeback' for U2

by Andrey Rodriquez

U2 has released its new album, "All That Jazz," which is a return to form for the band. This album marks a significant departure from their previous work, which was characterized by its experimental nature and disregard for traditional rock structures.

The album features a mix of pop, rock, and electronic elements, with a focus on electronic beats and sampled sounds. This approach is a departure from the band's previous work, which was characterized by its heavy use of guitars and drum machines.

The album's lead single, "All That Jazz," is a pop song with a catchy melody and upbeat tempo. The song features a driving bassline and drums, with a dance-pop vibe that is reminiscent of the band's early work.

The album's second single, "The Future," is a rock song with a powerful guitar riff and driving rhythm. The song features a driving bassline and drums, with a dance-pop vibe that is reminiscent of the band's early work.

Time to nix Library noise

What’s the busiest place on-campus during midterm week? You guessed it — the Library. What’s the loudest place on-campus during midterm week? Rights again — the Library! With the increased amount of use that the Library receives during midterm week, comes an increased amount of noise. A study done by a student and two professors with their mime-attached books to block the noise of the students above them found that most students go to the Library to study, there are those who name, noise, parks, or public parks where they need a quiet place to get away from our roommates and jobs. In the past, students have complained that noise is lacking proper public facilities for students to study. The Library is a research on a paper or cramming for a test, a student has said that the Library was not an adequate place for studying.

Now, we have something else to complain about. Unfortunately, there is little that the administration can do to alleviate this problem. The librarians are the Library made in an effort to have students move rooms to store for their studies. Now that we have the room added, we need the students in use. But students who want to use the Library, it is possible for them to use the room.

Common courtesy is what is needed. While the students who want to study with friends are a major source of annoyance, there are others.

Another disturbance from those students who bring their “walkman” along is a study partner. The use of personal radios would go unnoticed if these students would keep to themselves a personal level. However, many students place their radios in public, and that they disturb the library.

Perhaps an old adage can be modified to describe the noise problem in the Library — “everyone studious as you are, and I am, and I am, and I am.”

About that Bush ballot...

By Paul M. O’Hara

This is the first appearance of this editorial. A copy of the first page of this editorial is available for purchase.

I think before the election of President George Bush, the nation was more concerned with the economic issues and the future of the country. But now, the Bush administration has made a significant contribution to the economy. George Bush has been effective in reducing the budget deficit and creating jobs. The economy is growing at a rapid pace. The Bush administration has also been effective in keeping the country safe from terrorism.

As a result, the Bush administration has been very popular. However, there are some concerns about the Bush administration's policies. Some people believe that the Bush administration has been too focused on economic growth and not enough on addressing the social needs of the country. Others believe that the Bush administration has been too focused on foreign policy and not enough on domestic policy.

We need to be careful not to let the Bush administration's popularity go to their heads. The Bush administration must continue to be accountable to the American people and to be transparent in their decision-making. The Bush administration must also continue to be cautious in their foreign policy decisions.

My big b-ball tryout: A dream b-ball tryout away

by Wyo Zakka

Someone had to do it. So I was off to Indiana. Getting my start and the nagging question was: How was College Basketball in the Big Ten? I was too excited to find out.

I arrived in Bloomington and was greeted by the Indiana Basketball Manager. I was swept up into the疯狂 of the game, and I was ready to make a difference.

The trial lasted two days. It was rough. The competition was fierce, and I was pushed to my limits. But I didn’t give up. I worked hard and showed my determination.

I made it through the second day, or so I thought. But the manager called me into his office. I was nervous, but I was prepared.

He told me I had made the team. I was overjoyed. I had worked hard and I was determined to make the most of this opportunity.

My journey was far from over. There were more challenges to come, but I was ready for them. I was excited to make a difference and leave my mark on the game.

I am proud of what I accomplished, and I am grateful for the opportunity to be a part of this incredible sport. I know I have a long way to go, but I am ready for the challenge. I am ready to make a difference.

In the end, I made it. I made it through the tryout and I am now a member of the Indiana Basketball team. I am proud of what I accomplished and I am ready to make the most of this opportunity.

Making music at the mall: It’s your chance to play the star

by Carrie Boyle

People of all ages are singing along on music kiosks playing music in the Gallima. With the sound-training necessary, the customer WAVES the microphone around, laughing, shouting, and humming along. A display of欢快的曲调 appears, and a line is born. Staff* asks if the customers give the clients permission of recording their performance. If the customer agrees, a logo for the mall’s current event is displayed, and a line is born. The logo is then used to email the customer a follow-up email.

“I’ve never been to a place where you can just go in and let loose like this,” said Tom, a staff member.

“I had a lot of fun with this. It was a very different experience compared to the traditional mall experience,” said Sarah, another staff member.

The mall has seen a significant increase in foot traffic since the introduction of the music kiosks. A survey of mall visitors revealed that 70% of respondents said they enjoyed the new feature.

My big b-ball tryout: A dream drizzles away

Someone had to do it. Scotty would be my best bet. Getting his ass and the nagging question out of my head would make Coach Muggins happy in the face.

The day and the time of the tryout, holding trials, in search of a few good men, I learned, was the week grade.

Guess I’m not fit for a inch taller. All the other boys are in the sixth grade.

It was my ambition to benothing combined with a strong sense of organization. I set to work immediately, and I threw myself into it with the same intensity I put into baseball.

Not that I was playing well. My skills were poor, and I failed to make any of the seven wins.

I had to work harder. My determination paid off, however, and I was eventually chosen as the star player for the school team. I was elated, and I knew I had the potential to succeed.

But in the end, I was the one who didn’t make the dream come true. I lacked the skill and the determination to succeed, and I failed to reach the heights I had set for myself.

In conclusion, I can say that the tryout was a dream drizzles away. It was a lesson in perseverance, and I learned that success comes to those who work hard and never give up.
