Gays, Lesbians to gather quietly in support group

by Kelly Woods

Citing student need and interest, several Marist administrators and staff members have formed a gay/lesbian support group on campus. The group, in fact, got started because of the desire of all the students who attended the school's gay/lesbian support group to get together and talk about their problems, said Elizabeth Halloran, director of campus Ministry and Gary Comstock, assistant minister of philosophy, to create the Gay/Lesbian/Bisexual Support Group on campus.

Deborah DiCaprio, assistant dean of student affairs and a counselor for the group, said that the group does not conflict with Marist's Judeo-Christian tradition, since its formation in no way implies that the college endorses homosexuality.

"The purpose of the support group is to provide opportunity to get together and talk about their problems, they need to talk," said DiCaprio.

Currently, there are many other support groups on campus dealing with alcohol and drugs, but it doesn't mean the college condones them (alcohol and drugs)".

Presently, no meetings have been set because the contacts of the support group are waiting for the response of the students.

Contacts for the support group are freshmen and residence directors who have volunteered to be committee members and have attended a workshop on homosexuality.

Since meetings will not be made public, the contact members have the responsibility of meeting any student who calls and then informing him or her of future meetings.

"It's not that we want it to be a secretive thing, but students want to have it in a safe environment," said Comstock, a Protestant minister.

The topic for each meeting, at which a committee member will always be in attendance, will be determined by the students.

Comstock, who is gay, said he will be attending each meeting.

"I have the experience of being gay and can understand the problems," he said.

Group sponsors formally announced formation of the group last week in a Circle advertisement.

Halloran said the group fits in with the purpose of the Campus Ministry, since it supports the needs and growth of campus individuals.

"We are not working out of moral or judgmental view, but supporting the development of a person to the fullest," said Halloran. "We are dealing with the individual's needs and not the church's beliefs.

"Campus ministry does not cater to just a select few who say they are Roman Catholic, but to the needs of all the students. It is a non-denominational, which ministers to all people."

Comstock said that the support group should not be taken politically.

"We are not promoting a point of view, but want discussion," Fries said.

Views from cafe: there's no place like home

by Christine Marotta

Don Conroy's mom is going to be student aid.

The sophomore psychology major is from Chatham, N.J. and is of the opinion that because of his class schedule he keeps himself fairly well fed. "I have three important meals of the day," Conroy said.

"My eating habits on campus are limited, therefore I am compelled to gorge myself with fast foods late at night," Conroy said.

Conroy is just one of the many Marist students who are forced to change their eating habits at the beginning of each semester.

According to Jane O'Brien, director of health services, there are many reasons for these changes. Stress, making adjustments and the overall sense of freedom felt by resident students can all add up to newly established eating habits.

"There are a lot of decisions to make," O'Brien said. "When to eat and what to eat are always a concern."

Students often skip meals, replacing them with a candy bar and order pizza later in the event.

"We have to eat less," said Anne Ayotte, a freshman Champlain resident from Sharon, Mass. "At home I usually have a set schedule for meals, but at college I eat whenever. I really do miss Mom's cooking." Ayotte said.

Audra Smith, a freshman social work major from Stafford Springs, Conn., said the food served in her high school cafeteria was better than the food here.

"I mostly eat salad because I don't like the food," Smith said. "And every chance I get, I go out to eat."

The North End students and those residing at Canterbury Garden Apartments, an off-campus apartment complex located five miles from the college, are not exempt from this change in eating habits.

"I am eating less than I did when I was at the meal plan," said Townhouse resident Jim Joseph, a junior from Brook, N.Y.

"I would gorge myself at meal times because it was all you could get," Joseph said.

He said he is more conscious now of what he eats because he is doing his own shopping and cooking his own meals.

"A peanut butter and jelly, along with Fruit Loops were the usual morning for Canterbury resident Joanne Bryne, when she was on the meal plan. "Since I moved out to Canterbury, I started eating prepared frozen dinners and I am more satisfied," said Bryne, a senior from New Rochelle, N.Y.

Summer campus life: difficult but bearable

by Ann Timmons

While most students of the Marietta community packed up for summer jobs and days in May, others are still busy "in school." — earning credit.

In fact, Raymond Caesar, secretary in the Office of Housing and Residence Life, said, "I have some roommates who are still enrolled in summer courses or aupair or internships.

Dana Peterson, a junior from Marietta, said she will spend the two summers here selling IBM computer software at Dartmouth "for the money."" I don’t even think about schooling, I said. "It’s just a job, you can’t have fun while you’re working."

I did not think it was a problem to be here last year in Greenie House because I was out of town the whole time and so I didn’t need to stay here any time.

But it is a problem this summer because I want to be involved with the community. I want to make friends and just be a part of the campus atmosphere."

"It’s really a lot of money, but it’s not going to be enough to pay my bills," said Dana.

"I really need to save, so I’m

Police crack down on area drunk drivers

by Chris Landry

After last Friday night, Marist College students who frequently drink alcoholic beverages may be choosing to avoid campus bars for this weekend.

For years, Marist Police have been monitoring students' alcohol consumption and trying to prevent alcohol-related accidents. This year, they have decided to take a more aggressive approach.

The police have been working with the campus community to educate students about the dangers of drinking and driving.

"We have been here for several years, and we have seen a trend of students getting involved in alcohol-related accidents," said Chief of Police, John Woods.

According to Woods, many students are not aware of the dangers of drinking and driving.

"Many students believe that they can safely drive after drinking, but the reality is that alcohol impairs judgment and reaction time," said Woods.

The police have been conducting random breath tests on students and handing out flyers to inform them about the risks of drinking and driving.

"We want students to be aware of the dangers and take responsible steps to avoid alcohol-related accidents," said Woods.

Despite the efforts of the police, some students continue to drink and drive.

"We understand that some students may not take these issues seriously, but we are committed to preventing alcohol-related accidents," said Woods.

"We encourage students to make responsible choices and to avoid drinking and driving," said Woods.

The police encourage students to call 911 or to use the university's emergency response system if they suspect someone is drinking and driving.

"We want students to know that we are here to help and that we will take action to prevent alcohol-related accidents," said Woods.

"We are committed to making our campus a safe place for everyone," said Woods.

The police are also working with the campus community to promote responsible alcohol consumption.

"We are working with student organizations to educate students about the dangers of drinking and driving," said Woods.

Ads may heighten drinking habits
by Julie Collins
Kilkerie, a nationally-known psychologist and head of media research for an advertising agency, says the alcohol industry is a major sponsor of shows and events, but one of the biggest bookends of advertising is that most alcohol ads target college students in the fall.

Kilkerie noted that most alcohol ads are designed to create an atmosphere and imply socialization, but the media is promoting the idea that alcohol is a "must" for social situations.

She further stated that alcohol ads are often placed in college newspapers and on campus radio stations, which are frequented by college students.

However, Kilkerie noted that alcohol ads are not always effective in changing drinking habits among college students.

"We've seen that ads can increase the desire for alcohol among college students, but they may not necessarily lead to increased drinking behavior," she said.

The ads may also encourage students to drink responsibly, but Kilkerie said that the impact of these ads is limited.

"Alcohol ads are designed to create a certain image of college life, but they may not necessarily change the way students perceive alcohol," she added.

Kilkerie said that the alcohol industry needs to be more proactive in promoting responsible drinking.

"We need to work with colleges and universities to develop programs that encourage responsible drinking," she said.

Alcohol sends soph to emergency room
by Chad Lundy

A recent study of college students shows that drinking can get out of control, creating potentially dangerous risks.

Michael Hanlon, a sophomore at Champagne Hall, was admitted to St. Francis Hospital in Providence after being found unconscious in his dorm room.

Hanlon's friends and roommates said that Hanlon had been drinking heavily in the days leading up to his hospitalization.

Keeping it under control

A school-sponsored "Dry Day" has reduced campus drinking and has maintained safety.

"It is a better alternative than pulling drinking habits," said a campus safety official.

"We have seen a significant decrease in alcohol consumption among students," he said.

However, some students said they were concerned about the potential for other risks, such as social isolation.

"I'm worried about how this will affect my social life," said one student.

"I think it's a good idea, but I'm not sure how it will work," said another.

Overall, students agreed that the "Dry Day" has been successful in reducing alcohol consumption on campus.

"It's been a great way to promote responsible drinking," said a student council member.

"I think it's been good for the community," said another.

The letters which spell Marist are still missing.

I'm sure you had a good time in the front yard of the campus. You have bought before "college" a piece of property and put a fence around it. We all have to live in the same Marist College.

A new selection of the college is the usual slow pace at which those projects progress. Now there is a new concern: the coming of the new church. The years have passed and the Marist campus has changed to the church. But who is to blame for the Marist College community? Is it the same Marist College?

And there's more. The most important part of this construction is that the building is to be completed by fall of this year and something. When that starts some month, supposedly, it'll be over. We'll still need to endure the construction noise and the inevitable happening in Dooley.

Now that the measure will be in force for a few months, some will still call the Marist "Cursed". We can't blame them. But we can't blame the Marist community. It's happening.

Another thing that's been making noise around the college is the new construction. It's making noise around the college. It's constructing and new facilities. That attracts more students and more businesses. What are we paying for our future by compromising the present?

Women finally make their mark on rock

The voice of rock music is changing, says a new Federal Reserve Bank study. The study, the first of its kind, examines the role of women in the music industry and finds that women are increasingly making their mark on rock music.

In the past, women were largely absent from the music industry, with few women holding positions of power or influence. However, the study found that women are now playing a more significant role in the industry, both as performers and in other areas such as management and music production.

The study also found that women are more likely than men to be involved in the creative aspects of music, such as songwriting and producing. Women were found to be equally as likely as men to be involved in the business aspects of the industry, such as marketing and promotion.

The findings of the study suggest that women are making a significant impact on rock music, and that there is a growing trend towards greater gender equality in the industry. The study is expected to have a significant impact on the music industry, as it highlights the need for greater diversity and inclusivity in the industry.
Summer heightsides skills for three ROTC cadets

Warranty may or may bring with it the urge to try by the book and a job at the local hardware store for these three Marine students it was altogether nothing but an pipes and just a whole lot of fun.

"We were working during the summer at the "National Hardware" in Huntington, N.Y., and seniors Tim Paye and Joe Kowalsky were assigned to help a local marine student, Bill Brough from Wappinger Falls, N.Y., who was a pilot serving in the United States Air Force. Brough was stationed at Langley AFB near the United States Air Force base in Hampton, Va.

On the fourth of July, 1984, we were divided into: three teams: around noon, we took off hiking, with Joe leading the second team and Bill leading the third team. Brough was hiking with the police officers until a large crowd gathered around the trail, causing the cadets to be caught off guard.

After safety briefing, pre-game reviews, and all the usual stuff, the groups were allowed to get up and start hiking. Each team was given a map, trail signs, and some basic rules, including the need to hike in groups of at least 5:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. On the first leg of the hike, Brough's team was divided into "Bragh's, groups with the police officers, and the other groups with the police officers, which was a large, red· red· red· red· red;}..Joel on the first leg of the journey. Summer heights degrees skills for three ROTC cadets Undergrads may bring with them a flip to try the beach and a job on the side, but for these three Marist students it was altogether different. They worked for the ROTC program during the summer to help develop leadership skills. Shlomo, N.I., seniors and parents Paty Podolsky and Paty Podolsky, Bill Brook from Washington Falls, N.J., and seniors Tim Pemberton and Tim Pemberton, Shlomo Brook from Washington Falls, N.J., and Tim Pemberton from Washington Falls, N.J., were each involved in various programs during the summer. The students attended a leadership training camp at "The "Sun" Staff" and "The "Sun" Staff" Media Training Camp" during the month of July. All three programs were attended by the cadets and helped them develop leadership skills.

Due to the nationwide trend of college costs rising, many students are looking for ways to earn extra money. The ROTC program offers an opportunity for students to gain leadership experience while earning money.

One of the highest paying jobs for ROTC students is the ROTC program itself. The ROTC program is a great way for students to gain leadership experience while earning money.

After falling at approximately 10 feet above the ground, the cadets landed on the ground and were taken to a local hospital. The cadets were injured and are currently being treated in the hospital.

After hearing the news, Shlomo Brook's parents, Paty and Paty, rushed to the hospital to be with their son. "I don't know what to say," Paty said. "We just want him to be OK." Paty continued, "We're just here to support him and make sure he's safe."

Excitement and adventure is the course description, and Army ROTC is the name. It's the one college elective that builds your self-confidence, develops your leadership potential, and helps you take on the challenges of command. There's no obligation until your junior year, so there's no reason not to try it out right now.

Gridders equal historical mark by Mike O'Ferrell

The last time a Marist football team won its first two games was 1985. That squad went on to post a 6-3 record, the best ever for a Marist team on the Division III level.

Under new coach Rick Pardy, the Marist football team — the only third team in school history to win its first two games as they scored a zero, come-from-behind 10-9 victory over Pace University last Saturday at Orange Park.

The next challenge for the Red Foxes comes Saturday when they hit the road for the first time this season — taking their 2-0 record to Long Island, Pa., where they will battle the St. Francis College Red Flash when the Brooklyn College 42-7 last Saturday. This will be the first meeting between teams in two years —

Last Saturday — in the pouring rain — the Red Foxes overcame a 9-0 halftime deficit to defeat Pace 10-9.

The Red Foxes were forced to fight their way back into the game.

On the first play from scrimmage, Marist quarterback Dan

O'Donnell went to the air and found Dan DePrette for a 46-yard gain over the middle. However, DePrette could not hold on and Pace recovered the fumble on its own 34-yard line.

Phil Capra then wasted no time in getting the Foxes on the board with a 66-yard touchdown scamper. Capra led the Foxes on the next play. The point after was blocked — turning out to be the difference in the game.

Over the course of the afternoon, neither team would turn the ball over. O'Donnell was intercepted on the next possession and a few moments later DePrette fumbled the handle after a hard-fought, 15-yard gain.

Marist then moved the ball 40 years in 10 plays before fumbling it away again.

Pace capitalized on the turnover as Scott Peterson nailed a 32-yard field goal to give his team the lead.

Neither team could start any offensive drives for the rest of the game, and the game ended in a first half with five turnovers — three fumbles and two interceptions.

Moonwalk through time: Those Mets were Amazin' by Rich Donnally

The year was 1969 — the year Neil Armstrong walked on the moon.

And what seemed even more impossible to many than that Historic Event, was the fact that the Mets — a team in its first season seven years earlier had just lost 120 games and would win the World Series.

In the second season under manager Gil Hodges, the Mets finished ninth out of 10 teams in the National League.

This was a year of expansion teams — the Montreal Expos and the San Diego Padres — in 1969 forced the league to separate into two divisions of six teams each.

The Mets were led by best to finish last in the East Division, and bookends and lifetime’s contribution at odds of 100-1 to win it all.

As was their custom, the Mets lost their home opener on Opening Day, but were still undefeated.

One month into the season, the Mets were 5-2, setting in fourth place, six games behind the Cubs.

The Cubs were a veteran team and no one took the upstart Mets as a contender.

Volleyball suffers loss at CCSU tournament by Denise H. Becker

After defeeting Siena College last Wednesday, the Marist women's volleyball team did not fare as well as the Central Connec- ticut State University Tournament. The team — which played ninth out of 12 teams — defeated Cen- tral Connecticut State University, 15-11, 15-12, 15-7 in its first match of the tournament.

However, in subsequent matches, Marist lost to the University of Hartford, 9-15, 16-7, 6-15, the College of Holy Cross, 6-15, 15-6, 15-13, and Lehigh University, 15-10, 15-9, 15-4, 15-0, the CCSU tournament left the Marist team's record at 3-3.

Siena College will face New York University and Manhattan Collage in a rematch at 11 p.m.

Although coach Victor Vars- carolino said he anticipates difficulties, he believes that it is possible to beat both teams.

"The team has really solidified," said Varscarolino. "Right now we have two or three weeks ahead of where I thought we'd be."".

Despite the fact that Marist won only one match in tournament

Vince Carulo was selected captain.

The Red Foxes took advantage of the Senators’ error by moving the ball on the ground before Chris Douglas hit a 29-yard field goal cutting the Senators’ lead to 9-3.

Soccer splits first two road games by Chris Sheu

In the midst of an important early-season road trip, the Marist men’s soccer team’s roadtrip has been both up and down.

The men’s soccer team — the team’s longest of the year — in- cludes four contests against conference opposition.

Marist coach Dr. Howard Gay said he feels his team is definitely headed in the right direction.

“Our attitude is very good right now,” he said. "Remember, we’re playing a very tough schedule, which includes three of the top 20 teams in the country, and most of the New York top." The Red Foxes rebounded from a Northeast conference defeat last week at Fairleigh Dickinson University with a solid victory at Roberts Morris last Saturday.

Shawn Davenport, Marist's leading scorer, and Rob Metell also contributed a goal in the offensive attack which outshone Robert Morris 1-0.

Last Tuesday the Red Foxes ran into the powerhouse squad from FDU which handed the Red Foxes their first loss of the season. The FDU dominated the entire contest — scoring more goals (three) than Marist managed in a complete shutout.

"It was a fine victory to win the conference," said Dr. Gay. "The offense is definitely coming together now." Mr. Gay’s lineup change may be the difference in the offense.

"They’re a mature, skillful team that had total control of the game," he said. "It could have been worse if not for (goalie) Matt Scarrano." The Red Foxes still have two more road games to play before returning home to face Oneonta State University on Sept. 30. Marist also plays in the first round of the rival St. Francis College (N.Y.) Invitational on Sept. 27, although these games were not available at press time.

Marist travels to Ennisburg, Md., Saturday to face conference rival Salisbury College and then to Garden City, N.Y., next Tues- day for a game with Adelphi University.

The Red Foxes have won only two of the nine previous meetings with Adelphi, dropping six. Saturday will mark the first meeting with Mount St. Mary’s.

Brace yourselves: Something big is coming by Jay Reynolds

Just as the ozone problems have people saying that something big is going to happen in the environ- ment, it appears that recent trends in sports have sparked a similar discussion about athletics.

Consider, for example, the Na- tional Football League.

Sure, it’s only two weeks into the season, but the latest news is that something is not right.

The real Super Bowl is not the one powerhouse — even dynasties — are now seeing the second- and third-string players playing in the third quarter.

The Pittsburgh Steelers and Dallas Cowboys are the two prime examples.

Can they coach Jimmy Johnson is finding out the hard way that

In winning the preseason does not mean regular-season success. As for the Steelers — well, when your quarterback’s name is Bubby Brise, don’t expect the other team to be intimidated. Maybe AFC-Central is just too tough for the Steelers.

The Green Bay Packers, a team who has also seen both ends of the spectrum, are on their way back to glory, they mentioned New Orleans last Sunday.

The subject of subject of things that are not right — the Los Angeles Rams, Philadelphia Eagles, New England Patriots.

The Res (patriots) and the Eagles each have 2-0 records.

Green Bay, one of the Giants’ wins was against the Detroit Lions, but they still beat the Redkiss last Monday.

There is, however, one point of stability — the New Jersey Nets are 0-2.
