Third protest held to address letter

by CIRCLE STAFF

A letter to the editor in the April 14 issue of The Circle promptly yet quietly caught the student rally, this one on Sunday, April 17, increasing visibility of racial tension on campus. It was the third rally in two weeks. Desmond Edwards, co-chairman of the urban programming council within the Black Student Union, said he does not believe the majority of the campus is racist, though.

"I know there is an element of racism," Edwards said, a sophomore.

"There is a lack of appreciation of cultural issues."

He cited the letter, which referred to multiculturalism and diversity as "nonexistent," as proof that there is some level of intolerance on campus. Raul De Ramos, president of El Arco Iris Latino, said the was offended by the letter.

"When I see that (letter), I cried," he said. "I don't usually cry in public, but I cried when I saw that...I can't understand how anyone can say multiculturalism is nonexistent...It's just one person's view, but I'm offended," he added.

Marshall Cross, president of the BSU, said she was disappointed by the writer's letter. Jon Deakie, a freshman, did not attend the rally in the Chapman Hall bowling alley.

"It is unfortunate that an individual has such ideas and is not able to come out and defend them," Cross said.

Deakie did not return The Circle's phone calls.

The issue of the cap on clubs was also addressed at the rally. A flier distributed by the rally's organizers accused the Student Government Association and the College's administration of making no attempt to lift the current cap on clubs.

The flier states: "Supposedly our SGA representatives put this cap in place. We are here to have them remove it."

The flier goes on to state that several groups, like the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Student Association, will be curated due to the cap and "Income is their theme is not accepted by few."

Matt Gillis, SGA president, had been in agreement with much of what people at the rally said; however, changing policies was not a simple process and there were other considerations.

"We have students who are multi-cultural and unlimited resources at Marist," Gillis said. "If the senate votes to remove or expand the cap club, then there will be openings for the students."

WMCR to begin new program to counsel callers on love

by BLYTHE MAUSOLF

Staff Writer

You've thought about it, heard about it, and maybe even had it, but now is the time to talk about it: What is love? Visit Marist College. On April 27, during the lunchtime hours, from noon to 2 p.m., WMCR will be having the "Love Line." Juniors Michelle Wright and Heather Curatola will host the call-in program.

"We plan to have people call in to ask questions and we'll play some music between calls," said Wright.

Curatola said she came up with the idea after listening to the "love phone" on a similar program on Z-100, a radio station out of the East Coast Building. But unlike the "love phones," the sex line will deal more with relationship-type questions as opposed to more explicitly sexual questions.

Wright said that they approached Noel Kelly, the general manager of the station, and he was receptive to the idea, so it developed from there.

There will be a meeting right before the show airs between Wright, Curatola, Kelly and Desmond Edwards, the program director.

"To discuss the show and the fact that there will be a lot of people listening to it," said Wright.

The administration may be somewhat concerned about the show. Curatola said that they may think that the show will be obnoxious or disgusting due to the nature of the topic.

However, Curatola said that they would try to keep the show from getting out of hand by maintaining a mostly question and answer type format and discussing mostly relationship-oriented questions.

Wright and Curatola said they will have control over what they answer.

"We won't answer anything we feel uncomfortable talking about. We're looking for more of my boyfriend broke up with me, what do I do?" type questions than "what position is best?"," said Wright.

Kelly said that if he, the administration should question the show, the station would use the same argument as The Circle has, of freedom of the press.

Kelly said that they feel this is a relevant issue that needs to be discussed. Kelly also mentioned that WMCR is the only medium able to do it, because they can get an immediate response from people.

"Love Line" is not responsible for what they say on the show," said Edwards.

To encourage students participation, Curatola mentioned that they've put up posters to advertise the upcoming show. The signs are designed to attract attention, by specifically mentioning "Love Line.

In order for the show to be a success, there must be students who call in, as well as listen. Many people know about the show and are...

Fifth water main break impacts campus

by KEVIN O'NEILL

Staff Writer

The fifth water main break this year temporarily impeded main electrical, gas, and telecommunications lines on campus last week. The water main break this year occurred behind Donnelly Hall (adjacent to route 9) early last Friday morning.

The weather may be to blame for this latest breach, according to members of the construction team.

"After the terrible winter we had, when the weather warmed up the pipe cracked," said a Pizazzal source who wished to remain anonymous.

Another factor which didn't help was the fact that "the pipe was old and deteriorated," said Tom Dally, director of physical plant.

The break was discovered at 7:00 a.m. and secured by 2:30 p.m. after Pizazzal workers put aside some of the surprise they encountered.

While digging to get to the broken pipe with a back hoe, the roughly 20 workers who were at the site were startled when they realized that the main electrical, gas and telecommunications lines were all nestled together in the same corner. Taking no chances, the laborers took action and asked for security's help.

"At 10:30 a.m. security went door to door and told us to turn off the computers," said Linda Dahomma, of the payroll office. "They knew there was a break and didn't know what would happen, they thought there would be a surge.

"The Computer Center in Donnelly was closed from noon until 12:30 p.m. for a surge. Nothing happened to the computers and the rest of the day went on as normal.

"After their discovery, the workers had to hand dig," according to Dally the rest of the way to get to the pipe which took a vast amount of time.

"By using the machine (the back hoe), one scoop takes what would normally take one hour to do by hand," said the anonymous source.

An area approximately six feet deep and 15 feet wide was dug out to get to the water main. Workers then stood in four inches of mud as they worked on the ruptured pipe which had a circumference of nearly three inches.

With the main gas line running across the splintered pipe and the electrical and telecommunications lines neighboring, the workers temporarilly clamped the ruptured pipe.

The right sized clamp was not in stock and had to be picked up in Poughkeepsie on Monday morning which is when work was to be completed on the pipe.

"The city was not notified," said Edmunds.

"Workers said it is possible that the pipe could have been leaking all winter.
Greeks hear story of mother's loss to hazing by JOHN DOUGHERTY

Death by hazings has not disappeared. There are still a few that are being reported today. Elsie Stevens was one of them. She was a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma at Alfred University in Upstate New York. Her death was the result of a hazer who was considered to be a problem in the Greek System.

Elsie Stevens died on the morning of October 19th. She had been a member of the fraternity for several years. The hazer who allegedly caused her death was a member of the fraternity as well.

Elsie Stevens was reported to have been hazed several times over the years, but the fraternity claimed that she was not being hazed.

Elsie Stevens's death caused a national outcry, and the fraternity was forced to take action. They expelled the hazer and implemented new policies to prevent hazings in the future.

The fraternity's actions were seen as a step in the right direction, but many still feel that more needs to be done to prevent hazings from happening.

Greeks will have to remain vigilant and continue to fight against hazings in order to keep their community safe.
In the spring of 1993, a wealthy woman, Mrs. Stevens, was killed in a hit-and-run accident. The driver, a young man, confessed to the crime but claimed it was self-defense. The case was closed, but Mrs. Stevens's family was left with unanswered questions and a deep sense of loss. Every year on the anniversary of her death, they gather at her gravesite, hoping for answers.

One day, a young journalist, David, learns of Mrs. Stevens's story and decides to investigate further. He spends months researching the case, interviewing witnesses, and digging through police records. His determination is fueled by a personal connection to Mrs. Stevens, who had been a mentor to him when he was a child.

David's investigation leads him to uncover a web of corruption and cover-up within the police department. He discovers that Mrs. Stevens was not the only victim, and that there had been other accidents involving similar circumstances. With the help of a few trusted sources, he builds a case that could bring the police to justice.

But as David gets closer to the truth, he realizes that his own life is in danger. He receives threatening letters and his phone is hacked. He knows he must act fast to expose the truth and bring the perpetrator to justice.

In the end, David's persistence pays off. He exposes the corruption within the police department and brings the perpetrator to justice. Mrs. Stevens's family is finally given closure, and David becomes a symbol of hope for those who have been wronged by the system.
Frosh often have no Marist experience

by JENNIFER FORDE

Many high school seniors who were recently accepted to and planned to attend Marist College have never been to the school before. For many, these expectations were at odds with reality as they entered the world of college and were asked what they knew about Marist College as they began to go through the process of selecting their first year of college roll.

In the weeks leading up to the start of the school year, many students found themselves in the same situation: their parents were eager to share their experiences with them, but the students were not ready to share their own.

"I don't know what Marist is like," said one student. "I've never been there before, so I don't know what to expect.

"I'm excited about it, but I'm also a little nervous," said another.

"I've heard some positive things, but I also know that Marist can be a difficult place to adjust to," said a third.

As the first day of school approached, many students began to feel more confident about their decisions. "I'm looking forward to meeting new people and exploring the campus," said one student.

"I'm excited to see what Marist has to offer," said another.

"I'm not sure what to expect, but I'm ready for the challenge," said a third.

Despite their initial concerns, many students were able to adjust quickly to their new environment. "It was a bit overwhelming at first, but I'm getting used to it," said one student.

"The people here are really nice," said another.

"I'm glad I chose Marist," said a third.

As the semester progressed, many students began to feel more comfortable with their new surroundings. "I'm starting to feel like I'm part of the Marist community," said one student.

"I've made some great friends," said another.

"I'm really enjoying my classes," said a third.

Despite the initial challenges, many students were able to find their place at Marist College. "I'm glad I came here," said one student.

Freshman Hudson comes to Hudson to play softball at Marist

One of the first things that stick in the minds of those who know freshmen, like Michelle Hudson, is her love for softball. Hudson, a 19-year-old frosh from Marcy, N.Y., is a 5'2" middle infielder who plays second base for the Marist softball team.

"Softball has always been a big part of my life," Hudson said. "I've been playing since I was 10 years old, and I was always one of the better players on my team.

"When I came to Marist, I was really excited about the softball team," she added. "I knew that Marist had a good program, and I wanted to be a part of it.

"I think I've made the right decision," Hudson said. "I'm having a lot of fun, and I'm learning a lot.

"I'm really glad I came to Marist," she concluded.

"I think Michelle is going to be a great addition to our team," said Softball Head Coach Al Talamo. "She's a solid player, and she's a good student as well.

Mary's 48th commencement ceremony will be memorable. Except for the speaker, that is. There isn't one. This is the best of all possible worlds.

Marist is truly on the cutting edge here. Think about it: remove the chance to introduce, wait for applause, and the speech, applause again, and you have shortened graduation by half as long.

What has the Class of 1994 done to deserve a commencement speaker any worse?

The class had the audacity to feel slighted when the phone system was installed in the dorms, which is only a part of the "freshman experience." Being a freshmen in 1991 is different from being one in 1996. Apparent.

They had the unmitigated gall to whine when their parking spaces were taken away. Oscar de la Haza couldn't keep an eye on his car. It was a mutual combat operation, no sense to it at all.

Somehow they began to move in around. The first spark of enlightenment could be seen when they began to park the KvD in the years of 1993. Now, they are ready.

Depressed and embittered by privation, they welcome the challenge of breathing commemoration without the oh-so-relevant words of a respected individual to interrupt them.

They will suffer socially through the banal discussions of shapeless administration with whom they also communicate a Marist College parking sticker and perhaps (for those more liberal individuals) a T-shirt with the Marist logo.

After all what do seniors really want? A classy ceremony worthy of the hard work, endless hours and colossal amounts of money they've poured into this institution of higher education?

Nah. On. They want one. It's that simple.

While we're economizing on time for the exercises, why even call each graduate up individually? Why not say, "All right. If you paid your bills, you can go. If not, the business office in Donnelly, then go."

That's professional. It's time to thank all the little people who made this possible.

Let's have a couple rounds of applause for Sherry, the Kope. All the hard work she's put in and the Class officers must be beside themselves with gratitude for being excluded from this obviously absurd process.

Of course, she is not in this innovative program for graduation. Still but unfamiliar to me could not be without commendation.

However, for those seniors who are so obstinate to change and are given our in our part of the country the best we've ever had, you must graduate with a quick word of advice: call mommy and daddy.

I have never been in the military and I have no particular views of respect for them. I have been mistaken. Starting school as an Air Force flyer is a triumph for achievement. Citizen has earned its investigation for the real story: "Graduate from the New Marriott as they heard we were." (Echoes of the 60's)

She said, "Mom. I was just thinking. How could you do it?"

"You have to put in the time," I said. "They are all there and you are there." (Echoes of the 60's)

"But how do you do it?"

I am sure that you come from a campus where the news that the sun set on the morning with a million stars' credit card.

We are fortunate enough in the eyes of those who are about to participate in the form of our own commencement— you know the one—which is given in our part of the country. It's not much but it's important enough to hold the faculty and many of them are about to graduate as a number at Marist.

Wait a second. The Circle is about to revolutionize the new Marriott non-speaker format—make it more elegant if you will. Follow closely, especially if you are about to hold the faculty and many of them are about to graduate as a number at Marist.

Students look for cash, internships for summer

BY CYLINDA RICKERT

With summer careers comes one very real problem for new and returning students: money. The federal government has student loans and work-study programs to ease the financial burden, but many students find themselves short of funds.

"I don't want to rely on my parents to pay for college," said Cleo Davis, a freshman at Texas A&M. "I think it's important to have a job that will help me in the future." Davis, who works at a local restaurant, said she has enough money for rent but needs to find a way to cover the rest of her expenses.

"I'm looking for a job that will help me save money," said Katelyn Johnson, a junior at the University of Texas. "I want to be able to save for my future and not rely on my parents." Johnson said she is considering a job in the retail or restaurant industry.

Students look for cash, internships for summer

By CYLINDRA RICKERT

With summer comes warm weather, long days and, unfortunately, a job. For many, "summer jobs" mean jobs are to be found at the local shopping mall or a nearby McDonald's. But with the demands of school, the need to pay for college and other expenses, students are turning to the Internet to find summer work.

"The typical summer job is not going to be found on the street," said Sonya DeWeese, a counselor at the Career Development Center. "It's not going to be the usual thing that you think of when you think of a job. It's going to be something that you can do from the comfort of your home."

Many students are finding summer work through the Internet. One of the most popular sites is indeed.com, which offers a variety of jobs, from retail to technical support.

"You can find anything from working at a call center to working in a factory," said DeWeese. "It's all about what you're interested in and what you're qualified for."

While many students are finding summer work through the Internet, others are still looking for the traditional summer job. For those who are looking for a traditional summer job, the Career Development Center is offering a workshop on "Summer Job Search." The workshop will be held on June 1st at 10 a.m.

Toughman competition - is it sexist or not

The softball team, looking to begin another winning streak this afternoon when it faces the Houston Coaches Association at 3 p.m. at the Creve Coeur Field, has a record of 23-5 this season.

The Red Foxes have won 13 of their last 15 games, but a loss to Iona 2-1 ended their streak. The Red Foxes have won six straight games and are currently ranked fifth in the Coaches Association.

"We played well enough to win," said coach Michelle Hallen. "But Iona was just too good for us.

The Red Foxes are led by seniors Chelsea
Smith and Lea Schneider, who have a combined batting average of .400.

Smith hit a home run and drove in two runs in the game, while Schneider went 2-for-4 at the plate. Schneider also scored a run.

Smith hit her second home run of the year while Schneider hit her third.

The Red Foxes are now 16-9 on the season and look to continue their winning streak this afternoon.

Buchanan arrested, faces charges

by MATT MARTIN
Staff Writer

When Jerry Buchanan steps foot into the court on Monday, May 24, at 9 a.m., he will be in court for the last time as an NBA team as he has hoped, but as an alleged felon.

Buchanan, 21, from Chesney, NY, and Calvin Cooper Jr., 25, of Poughkeepsie face criminal charges of grand larceny, a felony; criminal possession of stolen property, also a felony; and conspiracy, a misdemeanor, stemming from their alleged theft and use of stolen credit cards April 7, according to Town of Poughkeepsie police.

"We felt that he was on the right track," said Doris. "But this has a cloud of doubt hanging over him. He hasn’t left himself much room to work with..."

Buchanan was arrested on a locker at Alpin sport health club in Poughkeepsie. Buchanan was picked up at 7 a.m. on April 7 at the Poughkeepsie Galleria to purchase over $1,000 worth of merchandise including sneakers, jewelry and stereo equipment.

If convicted, the two could face a sentence of up to four years in prison.

"We’re hoping that he’s a guilty at this point," said Martin’s public defender Gene Doris. "If he is, it certainly isn’t something he’ll be proud of.""

To date, Martin has taken no disciplinary action against either player following the results of the upcoming trial.

Buchanan is innocent until proven guilty

Senior Izzat Buchanan, along with Senior Hall’s Arantio Karo, was named a co-winner of the 1993-1994 Haggerty Award on Monday in East Rutherford, N.J.

The award is given to the most outstanding player among 18 Division I, II, and III college basketball games each year.

However, the honor of receiving the award was most likely the furthest thing from Buchanan’s mind.

Buchanan was arrested Thursday and charged with a $5,000 bond in Poughkeepsie for stealing $1,000 worth of merchandise from a clothing store.

When the guard was distracted, Buchanan opened a locker at AllSport health club in Poughkeepsie on a cross walk and placed the stolen items back in the locker. Buchanan was then arrested and taken to the local police station.

Buchanan could face up to four years in prison. Some of the talk around campus already has declared Buchanan guilty.

However, one legal process says Buchanan is innocent until proven guilty. Buchanan’s court appearance has not yet been scheduled until April 25. Both have been released without bail.

"We have a lot of hope and support from other schools," he said. "I would be very much surprised if he’s not handed down a long sentence..."

Laxmen lose to N.Y. Tech; mark now 5-4

by TERY L. STEWART
Staff Writer

The men’s lacrosse team fell to New York Tech, 19-10, on Saturday.

Head coach Tom Diel said Martin (5-4) had a difficult time against the Blue Jays.

“They did better than us on one-on-one," Diel said. "They were able to shake us off and free up, but I didn’t follow the flow of the game..."

“Terry is a great goalie," Diel said. “It was a tough game for him..."

Junior Dave Czysko led Martin with a team-high four goals.

The Red Foxes hosted Stonybrook College yesterday.

Results were unavailable at press time.

Buchanan arrested, faces charges

Still, Buchanan’s future at the college remains in doubt. "It doesn’t make it any easier to graduate," said Doris.

Buchanan, a scholarship athlete, was suspended by the coach at the end of the year to determine if making satisfactory progress towards his degree in criminal justice is enough to maintain his scholarship despite having used all four years of his eligibility.

“I don’t have an automatic renewal," said Doris, who, along with three other basketball players, has been on academic probation.

“There are a number of factors in the decision," Buchanan and his teammates have been advised not to comment on the trial’s outcome until after the trial. "I feel devastated," said Head Coach Martin. "I feel that he should pay his debt to society and then to end up in this position..."

As for the effect of the news on Mayor’s recruiting, Doris said, "I don’t think the decision will have any effect, but it’s tough to judge what will happen, the outside is thinking..."
